Mr. J. J. McBain has at his office some samples of this season's fall wheat and barley, taken from his farm in Monaghan. The fall wheat is plump and the barley is clean and bright. He says that a considerable quantity of both wheat and barley are already in the barns. If the samples are any criterion the buyers will have no reason to complain of poor quality of grain this fall.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

Worthy of Note.

Messrs. Elliott & Tierney have secured the A. C. A. Camp Store. Visitors to this delightful outing need hardly be reminded that this valuable acquisition to the material comforts of camp life could not possibly be in better hands. Peterborough prices will be the rule. Mr. Elliott will be the dispenser, and this is a sufficient guarantee that everything will be en regle. 619

At Fenelon Falls.

Bishop Dowling, of Peterborough, was in Fenelon Falls on Sunday of last week and until Wednesday. The Gazette says that on his way he consecrated the new Roman Catholic cemetery in Verulam. At Fenelon Falls the Bishop was presented with an address from the congregation. He was accompanied by several priests, including the Rev. Father Rudkins, Secretary, and the Rev. Father Kielty, of Ennismore.

"What Shall we Read ?"

The subject of the discourse of the Rev. F. H. Wallace, B. D., in the George Street Church on Sunday evening was "What Shall we Read?" The answer to the question was, first the Bible. But it was well to read other books, many of which illustrated the Bible. They must make a selection of books. They could not read everything and it would not be wise to do so if they could. Some years ago it was estimated that there were 1,250,000 bound volumes in the libraries of Europe, and at therate of two a week it would take 10,000 years to read them all. There were two tests to be applied to books, the moral test and the intellectual test. They should read books of morally good tendency, not books which lower the moral sense, sear the conscience and give distorted views of life. There were many great books it was not wise to read. He did not include Shakespeare among these. All books which dally with sin, which give them a sentimental sympathy with sin or which made them feel any sympathy with wrong should not be read. There were good books that were not fit to be read. Some books were not morally bad but were intellectually weak. They should choose books that had a definite purpose and that made an impression on their minds. In a word they should read true and great books—books of nature, geography, travel, science, history, biographies of great men, and poetry. In poetry they might read the easy books first, and their minds would be trained to read the masterpieces of Milton and Shakspeare. There were books of fiction that would do them good, but an undue proportion of novel reading would debilitate the mind. The moral test remained the same with novels as with other books. They should choose novels that described the true principles of human character. He mentioned, as good books to read, the novels of Scott, Dickens and Thackeray. As men and women would read stories, it was wise to select the best and to crowd out those that only lived for a day. Parents should have standard works in their houses to place in the hands of their children. They should read the books that were filled with the best thoughts of the best minds. They should have some method of reading and meditate on what they read as slovenly reading would weaken the memory and mind. If they read great books the muscles of their souls would be developed, their minds strengthened and they would be better able to do the work God wished them to do. To do their best they must be intelligent, and to be intelligent they must read. The man who knew the Bible and Shakspeare would so know the English language, human nature and God's will that, if he gave his heart to God, he would be a power for good.

The Oddfellow's Demonstration.

In their preparations for welcoming the Grand Lodge of Oddfellows and other members of the order who are to visit us early in August, the local lodges and encampment appear not to be neglecting anything that can give these numerous visitors from all quarters a favorable impression of our town and its people. Their appeals to the inhabitants, even those not connected with the order, to assist them in affording hospitality, in decorating the houses and in other ways, have been so favorably received that probably even those who have not yet determined to do their share, will be carried along with the stream and will not be found wanting. We understand that an application is to be made to the Town Council for their assistance and co-operation. They may readily accept the request for it is by no means a private interest that they will be favouring. It may be of incalculable benefit to our community that such a body of men, coming from all parts of the province and even beyond it, should be agreably impressed with our town and its surroundings. The influence upon them and to be communicated through them to their friends in different localities cannot fail to have a beneficial effect. For the Council to contribute toward this end would be for it to advance the public interest confided to their care.

A Sad Case.

This morning at about nine o'clock a woman was brought to the Police Station by her husband and others. She had been on the market square and acted in such a manner as to show that she was insane. It was not without considerable trouble that she was taken to the Police Station and when arrived there she was very disorderly. She smashed the globes on the gasalier and sent them flying in all directions. She was conducted to a cell where she remained comparatively quiet. Her husband's name is Murray. They had been living in New York. On giving birth to a child two weeks ago she lost her reason. They were on their way to Ennismore where her parents reside.

Personal.

At the recent examination of Trinity College School, Port Hope, Mr. T. H. Burnham son of Mr. Z Burnham, took first prize for general proficiency, took third prize in English and took a creditable stand in divinity.

On Sunday the Rev. J. Gilmour, formerly of Peterborough, now engaged in evangelistic work in Toronto, preached the sermons at the Baptist Church, Murray street. His sermons were delivered in a deliberate manner, were earnest and conveyed the truth of the Gospel in a lucid manner.

SERIOUS RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

Two Freight Trains Wrecked—Trainmen Injured.

This morning about five o'clock a serious accident occurred on the Canadian Pacific Railway at Myrtle station, about fifty miles west of Peterborough.

The freight train which should have crossed the express at Peterborough was coming into Myrtle station. Another freight train was standing on the track, and into this the east bound freight plunged.

The wreck was an almost complete destruction. Both engines were smashed and the cars were sent off in all directions. The freight, which consisted largely of flour in barrels, was scattered broadcast. Two tanks of oil were partly thrown off the carriages and a portion of the oil lost. The fire, however, did not reach this, and fortunately there was no conflagration, which otherwise would have been the case.

The fireman and driver on the east bound freight train were severely injured and a number of the freight hands were hurt more or less.

Myrtle station presented a wild appearance this morning, but since then the wreck has been cleared up considerably.

Central Park.

Work was begun on the Central Park this morning. Better late than never. The Street Inspector has removed the cobble stones which have lain at the north end and now water tables are being made on both the George street and McDonnel street sides. The Park has been raked off and the rubbish burned. Improvements are to be proceeded with. It is a pity that the fountain is not put in running order. It would cost but little to have an ice box laid down and cool water running in such a central place would be a great boom in this sultry weather.

The Wizard Oil Co.

Dr. C. S. Ritz, of the Wizard Oil Company, which gave open air concerts on the market recently, is in town to-day. He says that the report that his company has been broken up is not true. Two of the party left on account of having been fined for misconduct, but these have been replaced by talented vocalists. The company passed through town to-day for western Ontario.

Real Estate.

At the office of the Master in Chancery on Saturday, a sale of lands in the case of Strickland vs. Crowe took place. One block in Lakefield was sold to Mr. Jacob White for $425, another in Lakefield to Mr. R. A. Strickland for $75 and one in Dummer to Mr. F. Lonsborough for $140. Mr. C. W. Sawers conducted the sale.

Camping.

The camping season has begun. Already Stoney Lake is beginning to be dotted with white camps and the cottages are receiving inhabitants. To-morrow morning a large camping party with Mr. "Sandy" Stewart as captain will start out. They will camp on Hurricane Point.

Removed.

Mrs. Murray, who was placed in the cells this morning, was removed a little while before dinner. When being placed in the buggy she threw satchels and other articles out as fast as they could be put in. Finally a start was made and the unfortunate lady was taken away.

The Cobourgs.

The Cobourg baseball nine arrived in town to-day by steamer Golden Eye, accompanied by a number of their friends. A game is being played in the P. A. A. A. grounds with the Peterboroughs this afternoon.

A Conservative Elected.

OTTAWA, July 17.—A private despatch from Digby says that Jones is elected by a small majority as far as heard from, which will probably be increased by fuller returns, as all Robichau's strongholds have been heard from, but returns from Digby Neck, which usually gives good Conservative majorities, are incomplete.

Disallowed.

An extra of the Canada Gazette contains the following:—

"Whereas the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Manitoba, with the Legislative Assembly of that Province, did, on the dates hereinafter respectively mentioned, pass the following Acts which have been transmitted, namely:—

"Bill No. 5, 'An Act respecting the construction of the Red River Valley Railway,' on the 1st June, 1887.

"Bill No. 81, 'An Act to amend the Public Works Act of Manitoba,' on the 10th June, 1887.

"And whereas the said Acts have been laid before His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, together with a report from the Minister of Justice recommending that the said Acts should be disallowed,—

"His Excellency the Governor General in Council has thereupon this day been pleased to declare his disallowance of the said Acts, and the same are hereby disallowed accordingly.

"Whereof the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Manitoba, and all other persons whom may it concern are to take notice and govern themselves accordingly."

The Beginning of Consumption.

Blotches, pimples, eruptions, "feversores," ulcers and enlarged glands, are but so many outward manifestations of poisonous and scrofulous humors in the blood, which sooner or later are apt to attack the delicate tissues of the lungs, causing ulceration and consumption of these organs. Be wise in time and use Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," the greatest blood-purifier, pectoral and strength-giver yet known to medical science. It cures all these dangerous maladies having their origin in the blood, if taken in time.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep, by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

Rule of Punctuation.

A stranger in a printing office asked the youngest apprentice what his rule of punctuation was. Said the boy: "I set up as long as I can hold my breath, and then I put a comma; when I gape, I insert a semicolon; and when I want to sneeze, I make a paragraph."

PETERBOROUGH WINS.

THE GAME OF BALL PLAYED WITH THE COBOURGS.

A Close Score—The Final Inning Decides it—Many Fielding Errors Made—Play all Round.

A game of baseball was played on the P. A. A. A. grounds on Monday afternoon between the Cobourgs and Peterboroughs. The match commenced at three o'clock, the Cobourgs going to the bat.

Mr. W. Watson umpired the game.

The Cobourgs started off as if they were going to run the score up to the twentys. Wood, the first batsman hit a ball about six feet from home plate and secured his base on it. He stole around and came in on Pickerings base hit. The latter stole second and took third on a pass, and when Doyle hit the ball he crossed the plate. Mulhall sent a fly which Landy captured, but York pounded a grounder, brought Doyle in, Cann followed suit, and York arrived there too. When Ross was being put out at first base Cann slipped in. Kennedy was put out at first and the side retired with 5 runs to their credit.

Peterborough scored a 0 for their part. Landy and Callaghan got on the bags, but Metherall's fly was caught, Moore was struck out and Cahill was put out at first base before either could get in.

McGuire, for Cobourg, was hit on the leg and was awarded 1st base. Wood followed him on balls. Pickering made a slug to take off the cover but as the ball was flying past first base Metheral nabbed it. Doyle batted well, sending a ball for Moore in left field. It was returned to the catcher in time to put Woods out at the plate. Mulhall made a base hit but Doyle was not quick enough to get into 3rd. McGuire scored.

Peterborough picked up a little. Brennan went to the bat and the ball made a bee line for the fence. Second base didn't stop it and Brennan got to 3rd base. Billings took 1st base on balls and Galley was struck out. Kincaid surprised the crowd by making a pretty hit, bringing Brennan in and taking Billings around to 3rd. While Landy was being put out at 1st base, Billings came in. Metheral got on the diamond, but Moore went 1 2 3 4 again and threw down the bat. The score now stood 6-2.

York started in with a two bagger and scored a run. But the side were quickly retired, Cann and Ross being put out at 1st base, and Kennedy leaving the plate on strikes.

Callaghan in running to 1st got tangled up with the ball. He wasn't called in till he got around to 3rd, when he saw that the umpire was twisting his finger at him. Cahill and Billings retired at 1st base.

Zeros were now the order. Wood was caught by Metheral. McGuire couldn't get the bat swinging right, and Mulhall, who batted a sky scraper, was caught in magnificent style by Dr. Brennan in centre field. Two were left on bases.

Galley's batting was stopped by Doyle at 1st base, Kincaid's foul was caught by Mulhall, and Doyle caught Metheral's fly. Landy and Billings were left on bases.

It seemed as if they weren't going to score any more. York, the slugger of the Cobourg nine, made some more heavy batting. The ball was sent out to left field, where Moore distinguished himself and won applause from the stands by catching it. Cann's name was Can't this time. He couldn't hit the ball but came pretty near it. He hit a foul. Billings captured it. It was a "duck." Callaghan neatly took the ball batted by Ross.

Archie Moore went 1, 2, 3, 4 again and hid himself in the crowd. Callaghan took 1st base on a dead ball, and Cahill was caught out on a foul. Brennan made a couple of swipes and then the sphere went away over to the limits of the field. Callighan came in and Brennan stood on 3rd base. Billings, by a nice, clean hit, took 1st base and stole 2nd. Galley's grounder let Brennan in, and Kincaid's carried Billings around. Kincaid and Galley were on the bags when Landy went to the bat. He pounded Wood for a straight three bagger and on an error of the catcher came home amid great enthusiasm. Metheral retired on strikes. The score was now 7—8.

McGuire was struck out, and Billings took a brace of fouls from Wood and Pickering in very neat style.

Moore, Callaghan and Cahill were the victims in this innings.

Landy picked up the ball from Doyle's bat and put it to 1st; Cahill caught Mulhall, but York, the heavy hitter, scored a run and Cann was on 1st base when Ross retired on strikes.

The last half of this innings was also a zero for Peterborough. Score, 8—8.

Cobourg scored one in this innings, Wood coming in. Quite a time was had on the umpire calling Wood out at 3rd. As it was a manifest mistake the crowd demanded a reversal of the decision, which was made.

Metheral scored a run for Peterborough on the only ball let pass by the catcher during the game.

On the 9th innings good fielding was conspicuous. Metheral caught Mulhall and Moore, who didn't make an error during the day, took two in succession.

Peterborough went in, the score standing 9—9. They scored two and had two on bases when the last man was retired.

After the usual cheers the people and teams left the ground.

The score is as follows:—

AN EPISODE.

The Mayor Threatens to Shut Down on a Councillor.

An episode happened at the Council meeting which made quite an exciting time of it for a while.

On July 12th the Ashburnham Methodists came over and gave dinner in the drill shed. Acting Chief Adams demanded that they take out an eating house license. They protested against it, and he said he would bring an action against them. Whereupon they took out the license. The Rev. J. C. Wilson wrote to the Council to have the license money refunded.

When Councillor McNaughton heard of the proposition he strongly objected to it. He said that the Ashburnham people, whoever they were, had a perfect right to pay their license the same as the rest of those who sold dinners on that day. He would not give it back so far as he was concerned.

Councillor HARTLEY was sure that the by-law did not include church affairs of this kind. If a church got up a dinner or tea party—no matter what church it was, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian or any other—he would be the last to exact a license fee from them. He thought Mr. McNaughton was pretty small—

Councillor MCNAUGHTON—Mr. Hartley take that back! I didn't come here to be insulted.

The MAYOR—Order, order.

Councillor MCNAUGHTON—I tell you I want that taken back. I want satisfaction, and I'm bound to have it.

The MAYOR—Mr. McNaughton, if you don't keep order I'll have you removed from the chamber.

Councillor McNaughton simmered down.

Councillor HARTLEY then asked what Councillor McNaughton wished him to apologize for?

Councillor CAHILL—You said he was small. (Laughter.)

Councillor HARTLEY was very sorry he had hurt Mr. McNaughton's feelings, but it did appear to him rather insignificant.

Councillor MCNEIL defended the action of the police. Some twelve or fifteen stands had paid their license, and if the money were given back to the applicants it would all, by right, have to be refunded.

Councillor CAHILL moved, seconded by Councillor DOUGLASS,—That the license fee be refunded.

An amendment was moved by Councillor MENZIES, seconded by Councillor KELLY, but the motion was carried.

THE OKA INDIANS.

The Seminary Serves a Protest Upon the Methodist Missionary at Oka.

MONTREAL, July 18.—The Star says.—The Seminary of St. Sulpice has served a protest upon the Rev. S. E. Maudsley, the Methodist missionary, through their attorney, Mr. Jos. Girouard, summoning him to leave and abandon his premises at Oka. Eight days are given him within which to do this. The protest declares that the Seminary is sole proprietor of the Seigniory of Two Mountains, and that the Indians have been allowed to build, the seminary reserving the ownership of the land; that the Seminary has aided the Indians in building their houses, and that the permission to build these houses was only given to the Indians and them alone, and could not be transferred to whites. The house now occupied by the Rev. S. E Maudsley, the protest declares, comes under these conditions, and that his encroachment causes real damage to the Seminary. A protest has also been served upon Odjik and his wife, summoning them to abandon at once the plot of land on which they are about to build a house. The reasons given are similar to those in the other protest, with the addition that the Indians can erect no new buildings without the permission of the Seminary. A priest of the Seminary stated this afternoon that they were within their rights in treating the Protestant pastor at Oka as they had done. The Seminary's property at Oka had been loaned to the Indians for no specified time, but they alone were to reside on it. As the statement had been made that Rev. Mr. Maudsley was to establish himself there they had served the above protest against him. If the reverend gentlemen desired to construct a residence for himself, an edifice of worship for his flock, he should apply to the Seminary, and come to an understanding with the gentlemen of that institution in the ordinary course of business.

C. P. R. SMASH-UP.

The Brakeman Killed—The Company's Loss.

The smash-up on the Canadian Pacific Railway which occurred at Myrtle station, about half way between Peterborough and Toronto, on Monday morning brought with it fatal results.

The brakeman, James McIntosh, was killed the body being found covered with debris. His relatives live in Pickering, whither the body was taken. Among the injured is Engineer Andrews, who received internal injuries.

The loss is estimated at $25,000, besides the loss of the freight on two heavily laden trains.

SURPRISE AND PRESENTATION.

The Rev. F. H. Wallace Presented With a Cane at the Charlotte St. Church.

Last evening at the Young People's Monday evening class in connection with the Charlotte Street Methodist Church, a very pleasant surprise was accorded the Rev. F. H. Wallace, B. D., formerly pastor of that church, and recently transferred to the George Street Church. The rev. gentleman had just returned from a trip up the lakes and on his return found a request waiting for him to the effect that his presence was desired in the lecture room of the church, immediately at the close of the class. At 9 o'clock Mr. Wallace put in an appearance and found a large congregation of young people waiting to receive him.

Mr. O. C. ROWSE then stepped forward and addressed the reverend gentleman, the substance of which was the following:—

REV. MR. WALLACE,—A very pleasing duty devolves upon me this evening. The members of the Young People's Monday Evening Class desire through me to convey to you their appreciation and regard for the zeal and earnestness that have characterized your efforts as leader of the class for the past two years. Your words of wisdom and counsel will not soon be forgotten by us, and we trust they may be a source of strength to us in the performance of life's great work. We feel that we cannot allow the present opportunity to pass without expressing to you in a more tangible way than words the regret that we feel at the severance of your connection with this church as pastor, and with this class as leader, we therefore ask you to accept this cane, as a small token of the high esteem in which you are held by this class. We have also to convey to you our sympathies in the recent affliction that you have been called upon to bear and have often remembered you at the Throne of Grace. We trust that He who is the rewarder of all good deeds, will ever reward and and prosper you through life and that we may all meet at length in the place where there are many mansions and where there is bliss forever more.

Rev Mr. WALLACE, who was completely taken by surprise, made a very affectionate reply, and expressed his great pleasure in being so kindly remembered by the Young People's Monday evening class.

The pastor of the church, Rev. I. Tovell, then spoke a few words expressive of the great pleasure it gave him in witnessing this kindly expression of the young people to their former pastor and leader.

The gold headed cane was beautifully engraved, having the following inscription:—"Rev. F. H. Wallace, from the Young People's Class of Charlotte Street Methodist Church, July, 1887."

The very interesting gathering broke up shortly before 10 o'clock.

CYCLONE ON WOLFE ISLAND.

Barns and Sheds Overturned, Fences Levelled and Trees Torn Up.

KINGSTON, Ont., July 18.—A severe cyclone swept over the upper portion of Wolfe Island on Saturday, doing great damage. Hail, in the form of great pieces of ice, fell, breaking windows in many houses. The cyclone overturned barns and sheds, levelled fences and tore up trees by the roots. The hail was so severe that it crushed the grain flat to the earth. The path of the storm was not more than half a mile wide, and its greatest severity was manifested on the island. The storm lasted about ten minutes. William Staley's house, on Simcoe Island, was wrecked. Four women narrowly escaped. They ran into the house for shelter and soon saw the roof fly off. They ran out, and as they escaped through the doorway the sides of the house went crushing inwards. Two men on a load of hay found themselves flying through the air and slid off in time to save being buried beneath the hay, which turned upside down.

DAVITT CRITICIZED

By Messrs. Redmond and Dillon for Advice to the People of Coolgraney.

DUBLIN, July 18.—Mr. Redmond, Nationalist member of Parliament, speaking at Coolgraney, said he deeply respected Mr. Davitt's services, but regretted his latest speech, which amounted to a charge that was little short of folly against the advice given by the Irish leaders and a charge of cowardice against the people. The tenants, Mr. Redmond said, ought not to engage in an unequal struggle against the bayonets of their enemies. Mr. Davitt, replying to Mr. Redmond said he would accept an accordance with Mr. Parnell's advice, but would not be dictated to by any sub-leader of the Irish people. Mr. Dillon, speaking at Arklow thanked the people of Coolgraney for their admirable adherence to the plan of campaign. He was unable to refrain from expressing regret at Mr. Davitt's speech finding fault with the advice of the Dublin executive. He desired to defend Mr. Harrington, whose official position precluded him from replying personally. He hoped that in future such petty differences would be settled in the Council Chamber.

THE DEADLY HEAT.

Sunstroke Carries off Many Persons, in Different Parts of the United States.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, July 18.—There were reported up to midnight fifty-eight cases of sunstroke here yesterday, of which eighteen were fatal. The mercury during most of the day ranged from 100 to 104.

PEKIN, Ill., July 18.—The thermometer yesterday indicated 103 all day. Four deaths have occurred in the city and vicinity.

JOLIET, Ill., July 18.—Fourteen convicts at the prison were overcome by the heat yesterday morning and had to be taken from the gallaries to the idle house, where it was cooler. Sixteen went to the hospital and two died. The thermometer registered 100 at day break and 113 in the middle of the day.

CHICAGO, July 18.—At 11 o'clock last night the returns show that sixty-two persons have died either in or on the way to the various hospitals in the city since Saturday morning. These deaths were all the direct result of sunstroke or heat prostration.

ST. LOUIS, July 18.—The thermometer yesterday registered 104 in the shade. Eleven fatal cases of sunstroke were reported.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 18.—Fourteen cases of sunstroke were reported here yesterday. Eight were fatal.

NEW YORK, July 18.—There were nine cases of heat prostration here yesterday.

FARMING IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Low Prices and foreign Competition—Protection Required.

The following is an editorial utterance of the Lancaster Observer and Morecambe Chronicle in its issue of July 1st:—"Although the summer is magnificent beyond laudation, and the country smiles with promised abundance, from John O'Groats to the Land's End—even Ireland being gladdened by the look-out, near and far—yet farmers are not happy, and the dull depression is passing from the cereal districts to the grazing and dairying districts. Stock has fallen in price, and does not seem able to rise. Milk and butter are so low-down that a positive scare prevails in some parts of Cheshire and other dairy counties. Good fresh butter has been selling at sixpence the pound, and milk at sixpence the gallon. Prices like these are the annihilation of profit. They mean giving produce away, for nobody can possibly grow them at those astounding figures. Somebody is going headlong to the bad. Who? farmers, landlords or laborers? A few months will reveal. The immediate question is—What has knocked the bottom out of the dairy markets? The answer is shouting in every grocer's shop—butterine, Swiss milk, fabricated cheese, cheap American hogs, French and Dutch eggs. There is no mistake as to who are hitting us. But how long are we going to stand it? Till the whole race of landlords, farmers and laborers are killed off? Well, even that time is near."

THE FIGURES COMING.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—With regard to your challenge in yesterday's REVIEW, if we are both spared unti next October, when Canada will be shipping to the United States, I will gladly lift the glove which you have thrown down. Meantime there are large shipments of lumber and railway ties being made at present. Would you mind asking some of our lumbermen what the difference is in the price of lumber and railway ties in Canada and in Albany and Rochester deducting freight and charges, exclusive of the duty paid to the United States Government. The Bobcaygeon Independent could give full information as to the large and important trade in railway ties, and how it is hampered by the duty.

Yours truly,

W. CLUXTON.

BRITISH TRADE POLICY.

Those who take the trouble to watch the current of public opinion must have observed numerous indications that the people of Great Britain are beginning to question very seriously the wisdom of their modern policy of freetrade. It is merely a modern system, for though people thoughtlessly assume that free trade is an essential and time-honored policy of our Mother Country, it is in reality a recent experiment adopted at a period within the memory of many men now alive, and by no means yet in their dotage. For instance, till 1848 there was a duty of over thirty dollars a ton on iron. When such a system of protection had so built up the trade of Great Britain that the manufacturers and the nation thought they could safely adopt freetrade, those who dissented (with a loyalty to the national will very different from the disloyal and dishonest course of the Canadian Opposition in thwarting and nullifying to the utmost of their power the will of the majority of the people of the Dominion) honestly accepted the decision and gave the new policy a fair trial. Until lately they have patiently continued to do so, but now that the unobstructed fair trial has been given, and the result has been shown to be very different from that predicted by Cobden and his allies, they are reconsidering this important question.

We will give a few illustrations of the feeling that is now rapidly gaining ground, all reported within the last few days.

In consequence of the depression in the flour milling industry, and the fact that a number of millers had just been forced to discontinue business, the London Millers' Association held a meeting "to consider the question of the desirability of a duty being imposed upon imported flour." This meeting, with but one negative vote, decided, in view of the "depression in their trade, caused chiefly by the large importations of foreign flour, which have been the means of closing several mills and others only working half time," to ask the National Association of British and Irish Millers "to institute an enquiry into the cause of the depression of the milling trade and consider whether it would be advisable to ask for a moderate duty to be imposed on imported flour."

In Scotland the milling trade is in the same depressed condition and with the same result. The Glasgow Herald reports of a similar meeting of millers in Glasgow, that "the opinion held favoured the adoption of such fiscal measures as will save the industry from the utter destruction that threatens it from the severe, and what it characterized as the unfair, competition offered by America." Steps were taken to impress this view upon the public.

Other great trades are in the same position. The British Government has invited the European powers to a conference on the sugar bounty question, because the enormous bounties given by France and Germany are forcing the British sugar refiners out of the business. As it is not thought likely that France and Germany will consent to a cessation of these bounties, the British sugar refiners, the operatives and the population of the localities where this industry prevails, are urging that a retaliatory duty shall be imposed.

The London (Eng.) Shoe and Leather Record, which is still reluctant to abandon free trade and therefore is not likely to exaggerate against it the feeling of the great industry it represents, owns that "the belief in Protection under various fantastic guises is growing rapidly." It goes even further in its estimate of the growth of public opinion in this respect, for it says that "if the question of moderate protection were placed before the country to-morrow as the single issue of a general election, unassociated with any confusing element, the result would show a Government pledged up to the hilt to reverse our fiscal system." It adds:—"This is a bold assertion, but it is not made carelessly."

The London (Eng.) Machinery Market indirectly conveys the same idea as to other industries, for it remarks:—"In these days, when our home industries are gradually being destroyed by the competition of freely imported foreign manufactures, it is not unreasonable to expect that some effort should be made by ourselves to render the process of extinction as gradual as possible."

Several journals on this side of the Atlantic have just been publishing a description of the London Music Halls, a class of entertainment certainly of a popular, as distinguished from an aristocratic character. We are told that some of the favourite songs at these places jeer at the folly of freely importing foreign manufactures to deprive British operatives of their employment and their bread, and we are further told that such allusions are received with enthusiastic applause. Carpers may say this is a trivial argument in a grave cause. Great historians have held that these songs of the people throw a valuable light upon the public opinion of the time and have not hesitated to avail themselves of such material in forming their judgments. It is obvious at least that the conductors of these entertainments think such expressions of opinion likely to be popular and the applause of the audience, largely composed of working men, shows this supposition to be correct.

These are only a few instances from the reports of a few days, but they are additional testimony as to the trend of public opinion already manifested by reports of commissions, utterances of the press, resolutions of trade associations, growing minorities in chambers of commerce, speeches of parliamentary candidates and other manifestations of the change of view that is being developed.

And it is at this time, when all civilized communities have adopted protection of their industries, when even the people of Great Britain with their proverbial pertinacy are beginning to see and acknowledge their mistake in following Mr. Cobden's theoretical delusions, that certain disloyal and discontented Canadians are urging us to abandon our wise national policy, advising us alternately and almost with the same breath either to give up protective duties or else to adopt far higher protective duties, this last, however, on condition that the protection shall be in favour of foreigners and not in favour of either the Dominion or the Empire. These malcontents will hardly succeed in their unpatriotic attempts—the people of Canada are not thus to be deluded by those who having been rejected by their fellow countrymen are only anxious to upset everything, because they hope they may thus have a chance of coming to the top.

While the people of Great Britain are in this mood, seriously contemplating retaliatory duties on those nations which refuse to give them reciprocal free markets, the people of Canada would be very foolish to link themselves with a foreign nation in antagonism to the mother country. If we act judiciously, when the United Kingdom is establishing protective duties there may be a good opportunity of bringing about not an imperial zollverein or mutual free trade, but an agreement for discriminating against trade with foreigners and in favor of trade between the different members of our Empire. This would secure us as Canadians the best market for nine-tenths of our surplus products and would strengthen and consolidate the whole Empire of which we form an important part.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc.

The brute laughed. "No, I can't take a letter to the captain," he said; "I saw Jan Vanzyl shoot him. He fell so," and he suddenly collapsed all in a heap on the path, in imitation of a man struck dead by a bullet. "I can't take him a message, missie," he went on, rising, "but one day you will be able to go and look for him yourself. I did not mean that; what I meant was that I could take a letter to Frank Muller. A live Boer is better than a dead Englishman; and Frank Muller will make a fine husband for any girl. If you shut your eyes you won't know the difference."

"Go!" said Bessie, in a choked voice, and pointing her hand toward the avenue.

Bessie vacantly watched him go. Then, as though struck by a thought, she turned and went into the sitting room.

"What is all this about, Bessie?" said her uncle, following her. "What does that man mean about Frank Muller?"

"It means, uncle dear," she said at last, in a voice that was something between a sob and a laugh, "that I am a widow before I am married. John is dead!"

"Dead! dead!" said the old man, putting his hand to his forehead and turning round in a dazed sort of fashion—"John dead!"

"Read the letter," said Bessie, handing him Frank Muller's missive.

The old man took it and read it. His hand shook so much that it took him a long while to come to the end of it.

"Good God!" he said at last, "what a blow! My poor Bessie," and he took her into his arms and kissed her. Suddenly a thought struck him. "Perhaps it is all one of Frank Muller's lies," he said, "or perhaps he made a mistake."

But Bessie made no answer. For the time, at any rate, hope had left her.

CHAPTER XXVI.

FRANK MULLER'S FAMILIAR.

The study of the conflicting elements that go to make up a character like Frank Muller's, however fascinating it might prove, is not one that can be attempted in detail here. Such a character in its developed form is fortunately practically impossible in a highly civilized country. The dead weight of the law would crush it back to the level of the human mass around it. But those who have lived in the wild places of the earth will be acquainted with its prototypes, more especially in those places where a handful of a superior race rules over the rage thousands of an inferior. Solitudes are favorable to the production of strongly marked individualities. The companionship of highly developed men, on the contrary, whittles individualities away, the difference between their growth being the difference between the growth of a tree on a plain and a tree in the forest. On the plain the tree takes the innate bent of its nature. It springs in majesty toward the skies; it spreads itself around or it slants along the earth just as nature intended that it should, and in accordance with the power of the providential breath that bends it. In the forest it is different. There the tree grows toward the light wherever the light may be. Forced to modify its natural habit in obedience to the pressure of circumstances over which it has no control, it takes such form and height as its neighbors will allow to it, all its energies being directed to the preservation of life, in any shape and at any sacrifice. Thus it is with us all. Left to ourselves, or surrounded only by the scrub of humanity, we become outwardly that which the spirit within would fashion us to, but placed among our fellows, shackled by custom, restrained by law, pruned and bent by the force of public opinion, we grow as like one to another as the fruit bushes on a garden wall. The sharp angles of our characters are fretted away by the friction of the crowd, and we become round and polished, and superficially, at any rate, identical. We no longer resemble a solitary bowlder on a plain, but are as a stone built into the great edifice of civilized society.

The place of a man like Frank Muller is at the junction of the waters of civilization and barbarism. Too civilized to possess those savage virtues which, such as they are, represent the quantum of innate good nature has thought fit to allow in the mixture man, and too barbarous to be subject to the teiderer restraints of cultivated society, he is at once strong in the strength of both and weak in their weaknesses. Animated by the spirit of barbarism, superstition and almost entirely destitute of the spirit of civilization, mercy, he stands on the edge of both and an affront to both, as terrific a moral spectacle as the world can afford.

Had he been a little more civilized, with his power of evil trained by education and cynical reflection to defy the attacks of those spasms of unreasoning spiritual terror and unrestrainable passion that have their natural dwelling place in the raw, strong mind of uncultivated man, Frank Muller might have broken upon the world as a Napoleon. Had he been a little more savage, a little further removed from the unconscious but present influence of a progressive race, he might have ground his fellows down and ruthlessly destroyed them in the madness of his rage and lust, like an Attila or a T'Chaka. As it was, he was buffeted between two forces he did not realize, even when they swayed him, and thus at every step in his path toward a supremacy of evil an unseen power made stumbling blocks of weaknesses which, if that path had been laid along a little higher or a little lower level in the scale of circumstance, would themselves have been deadly weapons of overmastering force.

See him, as with his dark heart filled up with fears, he thunders along from the scene of midnight death and murder his brain had not feared to plan and his hand to execute. Onward his black horse strides, companioned by the storm, like a dark thought traveling on the wings of Night. He does not believe in any God, and yet the terrible fears that spring up in his soul, born fungus like from a dew of blood, take shape and form, and seem to cry aloud, "We are the messengers of the avenging God." He glances up. High on the black bosom of the storm the finger of the lightning is writing that awful name, and again and again the voice of the thunder reads it out aloud in spirit shaking accents. He shuts his dazed eyes, and even the falling rhythm of his horse's hoofs beat out "There is a God! there is a God!" from the silent earth on which they strike.

And so on through the tempest and the night, flying from that which no man can leave behind.

It was near midnight when Frank Muller drew rein at a wretched mud hut perched by itself on the banks of the Vaal, and flanked on its rear by an equally miserable shed. The place was as silent as the grave; not even a dog barked.

"If that beast of a Kaffir is not here," he said aloud, "I will have him flogged to death. Hendrik! Hendrik!"

As he called, a form rose up at his very feet, causing the weary horse to start back so violently that he almost threw his rider to the ground.

"What in the name of the devil are you?" almost shrieked Frank Muller, whose nerves, indeed, were in no condition to stand fresh shocks.

"It is me, baas," said the form, at the same time throwing off a gray blanket in which it was enveloped, and revealing the villainous countenance of the one eyed witch doctor who had taken the letter to Bessie, and who had for years been Muller's body servant, and followed him about like a dog.

"Curse you, you dog! What do you mean by hiding up like that? It is one of your infernal tricks; be careful"—tapping his pistol case—"or I shall one day put an end to you and your witchcraft together."

"I am very sorry, baas," said the man, in a whine, "but half an hour ago I heard you coming. I don't know what is the matter with the air to-night, but it sounded as though twenty people were galloping after you. I could hear them all quite clear; first the big black horse, and then all those who came after, just as though they were hunting you; and so I came out and lay down to listen, and it was not till you were quite close that one by one the others stopped. Perhaps it was the devils who galloped."

"Curse you, stop that wizard's talk," said Muller, his teeth chattering with fear and agitation. "Take the horse and clean and feed him well; he has galloped far, and we start at dawn. Stop! tell me, where are the lights and the brandy? If you have drunk the brandy I will flog you."

"They are on the shelf on the left as you go in, baas, and there is flesh there, too, and bread."

Muller swung himself from the saddle and entered the hut, pushing open the cranky, broken hinged door with a kick. He found the box of Tandstickor matches, and, after one or two false shots—due chiefly to his shaking hand—succeeded in getting fire and lighting a coarse dip such as the Boers make out of mutton fat. Near the candle was a bottle of peach brandy two-thirds full, and a tin pannikin and a jug of river water. Seizing the pannikin, he filled it half full of spirit, added a little water, and drank the mixture off. Then he took down the meat and bread from the same shelf, and, cutting some of each off with his clasp knife, tried to eat. But he could not succeed, and soon gave up the attempt, consoling himself instead with the brandy.

"Bah!" he said, "the stuff tastes like hell fire;" and he filled his pipe and sat smoking.

Presently Hendrik came in to say that the horse was eating well, and was about to go again, when his master beckoned him to stop. The man was surprised, for Muller was not generally fond of his society, except when he wanted to consult him or get him to exercise his pretended art of divination; but the fact was that at that moment Frank Muller would have been glad to consort with a dog. The events of the night had brought this terrible man, steeped in iniquity from his youth up, down to the level of a child frightened at the dark. For a while he sat in silence, the Kaffir squatted on the ground at his feet. Presently, however, the doses of powerful spirit took effect on him, and he began to talk more unguardedly than was his custom, even with his black "familiar," Hendrik

COMMERCIAL ANNEXATION.

A Sound Reform View of the Mischievous Agitation.

The political wire pullers, who are advocating Commercial annexation, cannot get all even of their own party to follow them. This is what the Galt Reformer, a sound Reform journal, says of it. "From a party point of view, we would regard commercial union as about as assinine a piece of business for the Liberal cause as could well be imagined. Three times over the electorate has declared that, in order to protect Canadian manufacturers, they will not let Americans send in their manufacturers into Canada except on payment of high duties. Notwithstanding being beaten several times on this issue, some Liberal journals seem to think that the same electorate may be induced to turn round and throw down every barrier which now prevents the immense manufactories of the United States from crushing out many of the smaller and weaker establishments of this country. And how do they propose to bring it about? By trying to put salt on the tail of the Tory farmer; by telling him he would get more for the horse he sells to the Yankee to ride, and the barley he sells him to make his beer. We have had some experience with this kind of political bird and a shyer and more cunning one does not exist. He will do about commercial union just as he does about temperance; he will talk temperance, attend temperance conventions, but vote Tory every time! All the Tory farmers who can be caught in this fashion, as the late A Ward would have said, "won't amount to shucks," whilst the Liberal party would receive deadly blows in other directions. The leaders of the party, whilst favorable to reciprocity, have never sanctioned commercial union, and we have no idea of its becoming part of the Liberal policy. But what would be its effect if so adopted? It would make the whole manufacturing interests of Canada nearly a unit against us; it would drive nearly the whole importing interest, as witness the action of the Toronto Board of Trade, into the ranks of our opponents, and as soon as the farmers came to understand that the scheme was not reciprocity as of old, but that they would lose more in the home market than they would gain in the foreign one, we do not believe even a majority of them would sustain it. When to this is added that the loyal sentiment of the country would inevitably be arrayed against a proposition which must sooner or later terminate British connection and lead to absorption into the United States, we return to the word 'assinine,' as the only one which adequately describes our idea of commercial union from a party point of view."

Give them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well

Call it cold, cough, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad.. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

THE FUTURE ROUTE.

If the proposed arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Company is entered into—an arrangement which is recommended by Imperial considerations of paramount importance—a far shorter period than ten years may easily witness such a development of communication by that route and so great a saving of time in transit as compared with the Suez Canal route that merchants and traders will insist on the adoption of that route not merely as an alternative and subsidiary route, but as the regular mail route.—*London (Eng.) Railway Connection.

Port hope is agitating for connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Proposition is to have a twenty mile line built from Port Hope, touching the head of Rice Lake, and connecting with the C. P. R. at Cavanville.

Decoration.

Mr. H. W. Watson, decorative artist, has been appointed by the Decoration Committee in connection with the Oddfellows Demonstration Committee, Superintendent of the street decoration. Twenty-two capable assistants has been assigned to him, and his handiwork will be no doubt the subject of admiration during demonstration week.

Those Rubber Boots.

The Gutta Percha Manufacturing Company, which has done considerable business with the town, had the assurance to send a whole cargo of firemen's rubber boots without having received an order for the same. The boots came and no one received them on behalf of the town; they were scattered here and there, until all were gone. The company have billed the town for $114, which account they are not likely to have paid.

Military Appointment.

Cobourg's Sentinel-Star says:—" We are informed by George Guillett, M. P., that Major Henry Smith, late of C Company School, Toronto, has received the appointment of Commandant of D Company Royal School of Infantry, London. We congratulate Lieut. Col. Smith on his deserved promotion." The military officers in this vicinity and generally througout the 3rd. Military District will be pleased to learn of Col. Smihh's promotion, as the Colonel was popular among his companions in arms. The appointment gives general satisfaction.

Grimsby Park.

The Fire Brigade have decided to hold their excursion to Grimsby Park on Thursday, July 28th. A special train will leave the C. P. R. station at 6 o'clock a. m., arriving in Toronto in time to connect with the steamer Rupert, which leaves at 9 o'clock. Fare for the round trip, $2, including admission to the Park. Fare to Toronto and return, $1.50, good for two days. There will be a special attraction for visitors at Grimsby Park on July 28th, in the shape of two concerts, afternoon and evening, by the Arion Orchestra, of Toronto.

PILES of Remnants of every Department now being cleared out for whatever they will bring, at TURNBULL'S.

Raspberry Syrup.

A town druggist gives the following recipe for raspberry syrup, which he says is far ahead of raspberry vinegar:—Put 6 pounds of raspberries into a China or glass bowl, or an earthen pan not glazed with lead, with a quart of water, in which has been dissolved 2¼ ounces of tartaric acid, and let it remain 24 hours; then strain it, taking care not to bruise the fruit. To each pint of clear liquor add 1¼ pounds of pounded loaf sugar, and stir it with a silver spoon till dissolved. Leave it for a few days then bottle it close. A little of this syrup with water forms a refreshing drink.

Important to Cheese Men.

The Frome District Agricultural Society of Frome, Somerset, England, offer Jubilee cheese prizes of £90 at their next exhibition, September 28, 1887, for the best four cheeses of not less than 28 lbs. each, of any system or make (except Stiltons), made by the exhibitors, their family or their servants, during the year 1886. Open to Her Majesty's Dominions. 1st prize, £50; 2nd prize, £20; 3rd prize, £10; 4th prize, £6; 5th prize, £4. The 1st prize will consist of £30 in money and a silver cup valued at £20. Last day of entry, September 14. Entrance fee, £1. Address Wm. Pulham, Secretary, Frome, Somerset. This is of importance to the cheese interest of Canada, and it is to be hoped that our cheese makers will be represented in the contest for these prizes.

LOCAL LEGISLATION.

BUSINESS DISPOSED OF AT THE COUNCIL MEETING.

The Oddfellows' Grant—Scott Act Fines Dispute Settled—Bridge Building and Sidewalks—The Board of Health's Demand.

There were present: His Worship the Mayor, and Councillors Douglass, McNeil, Cahill, Stenson, Hartley, Kendry, Menzies, Moore, Kelly, Davidson and McNaughton.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The following communications were read:—

From H. Rossiter, demanding that the charges preferred by him against R. H Adams be enquired into.—Police Supervision Committee.

From E. E. Henderson, inviting the Mayor and Council to attend the session of the Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., which meets in the Court House on August 9th, and inviting the Mayor to deliver an official address of welcome to the Grand Lodge delegates.—Received.

From Edg. Pearse, County Clerk, informing the Council that the County Council had appointed Mr. H. T. Strickland as arbitrator.—Finance Committee.

From the Fire Underwriters' Association giving details of what appliances will be required so that the town be placed in class B.—Fire, Water and Light Committee.

From Edg. Pearse, County Clerk, objecting to Mr. T. Cahill as arbitrator, he being a member of the Town Council.—Received.

From the Town Trust, asking a levy of $7,578, to meet accruing engagements.—Finance Committee.

From E. B. Edwards, Town Solicitor, stating that in the Town case, Moore vs. Cummings, one of the defendants had proposed that Judge Weller deal with the matter and settle it in an equitable manner.—Finance Committee.

From the Board of Health requesting the Council to fill in Rink Street at Spaulding's Bay.—Received.

From J. C. Wilson, on behalf of the Methodists of the Ashburnham circuit, complaining that the Chief of Police compelled them to take out a license on July 12, they having held a dinner in the drill shed and asking refund of the license.—Refunded.

From the Uxbridge Organ Company declining the Town Council's offer to locate their works in Peterborough.—Received.

From W. Henderson, in reference to a McDonnel Street hydrant.—Fire Water and Light Committee.

From the License Commissioners of West Peterborough making a demand of $737.97 for the enforcement of the Scott Act during the past year.—Finance Committee.

From H. Grundy, in reference to street improvements.—Street and Bridge Committee with power to act.

ODDFELLOWS DEMONSTRATION.

A deputation from the Oddfellows, consisting of Messrs. J. R. Stratton, R. W. Errett, J. Mills, E. E. Henderson and A. McFarlane, waited on the Council asking for a grant toward defraying the expense of entertaining the Oddfellows. It was explained that elaborate arrangements were made for a great gala day. Low rates had been got and there was no doubt but that thousands would visit town on demonstration week. They claimed support on account of its being a great advantage to the town as an advertisement and otherwise. Messrs. Stratton, Henderson, Errett, McFarlane and Mills spoke. The sum asked was $300.

Councillor KELLY moved, seconded by Councillor STENSON—That the Treasurer issue his cheque for $300 in favor of R. W. Bell, M. D., Treasurer of the Oddfellow's Reception Committee to assist them in suitably entertaining the representatives of the Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F., Grand Encampment, to be held in the Town of Peterborough on August the 9th to the 12th.

Councillor KELLY said that this sum would about pay for advertising the town. There was no doubt that the Oddfellows were booming the town. The bills and posters were up from Windsor to Montreal and in the United States

Councillor McNaughton objected. The other societies would have as good a right to make a demand.

Councillor DOUGLASS also thought that it was out of place. He would rather pay his part of the sum privately.

Councillor KENDRY figured up that the demonstration would bring to town $80,000. He looked on the grant as a good investment.

Councillor MOORE would rather subscribe privately.

Councillor MENZIES moved in amendment, seconded by Councillor MOORE,—That $200 be granted.

Councillor MENZIES would not object to the $300, as he knew it would be money well spent, but they were going to build a good many bridges this year and they would have to cut down expenses. He thought they would have to do with $200.

Councillor MCNEIL spoke in a stirring and patriotic manner as to the advertising of the town, and the hard work the local Oddfellows had done to make the demonstration a success. He looked on it as the best opportunity of spending $300 which the Council had ever had.

The amendment was put and carried by one of a majority.

The deputation returned thanks for the grant.

AN ACCOUNT.

Councillor KELLY moved, seconded by Councillor MCNEIL,—That the account of Ruben Kent (police duty) be referred to the Finance Committee.

SCOTT ACT FINES.

The MAYOR said that the County had agreed to take $550 as a settlement of their claim to the Scott Act fines. As the County had their own Magistrate and were doing their own Scott Act business, he thought it wise to pay this money over rather than run the risk of law expenses.

Councillor CAHILL moved, seconded by Councillor HARTLEY,—That the Scott Act dispute between the Town and County be referred to a special committee composed of Councillors Moore, Kendry and Davidson.

After a short discussion Councillor Cahill withdrew his motion, and Councillor MOORE moved, seconded by Councillor CAHILL,—That the sum of $550 be paid over to the Treasurer of the County of Peterborough, in full discharge of all claims whatever of the County against the Town in respect of fines and penalties under the Canada Temperance Act of 1878, and that a proper release be obtained therefor. —Carried.

A BRIDGE.

Councillor CAHILL moved, seconded by Councillor Davidson,—That the Street and Bridge Inspector be authorized to rebuild the bridge on George Street at the intersection of Townsend Street, and in doing so to build to the south line of Townsend Street and the west line of George Street.—Carried.

STONE.

Councillor HARTLEY moved, seconded by Councillor KENDRY,—That Mr. Sherwood be given permission to take stone from the quarry, he to leave the street in as good a condition as it is now.—Lost.

ANTICIPATING THE C. P. R.

Councillor CAHILL moved, seconded by Councillor DAVIDSON,—That the Town Engineer be authorized to strike the grade on Water street, south from Sherbrook street to Dalhousie street and on Dalhousie street, from Aylmer street to the Otonabee river, and that he communicate with the engineer to the C P. R. and request him to make a grade to the south to the Central Iron Works harmonizing with grade of the street.

LUCKY TO GET IT.

Councillor MOORE moved seconded by Councillor DOUGLASS—That the Street Inspector be directed to put down a sidewalk on the west side of Downie street from London street south 200 feet with proper crossings to the east side of the street.—Carried.

A COMMENCEMENT, AT LEAST.

Councillor CAHILL moved, seconded by Councillor CAHILL,—That the comunication of the Board of Health asking the Town to fill in Rink Street full width, be complied with and that the Street Inspector be authorized to have it done as soon as possible.—Carried.

DRIVING BACK THE WATER.

Councillor MOORE brought before the Council the complaints of the people on Murray Street who had been visited by floods last spring. The cribbing being done now was insufficient. It should be carried down the whole front of the creek to defend the property lying along it.

Councillor CAHILL defended the action of the Street and Bridge Committee. He set his face against cribbing the property of private owners.

Just here the clock struck eleven and the Council adjourned for three weeks.

Oddfellows' Invitation.

The following is a copy of the letter of invitation from the Oddfellows of the town to the Town Council, which was read and the invitation accepted on Monday evening:—

PETERBOROUGH, July 18th, 1887.

To the Mayor, Town Council and Civic Officials of the Town of Peterborough:—

GENTLEMEN,—In behalf of the Oddfellows of Peterborough, I beg to tender you a cordial invitation to attend the reception to be given to the Grand Master, Grand Officers, representatives and delegates of the Grand Lodge of Ontario, which body will convene in annual session in the Court House in the Town of Peterborough on Wednesday morning, the 10th August, proximo, at 9 o'clock punctually. And I respectfully request on the part of the local societies that His Worship the Mayor be desired by your honorable body to deliver, as official representative of the citizens of the town, an address of welcome to the Grand Lodge on that occasion,

The members of the Society indulge the hope that every member of your Council, and every civic official, will do them the honor to be present at that hour, to extend the corporate hospitality to the guests of the town.

I have the honor to be,
Gentlemen, your obedient servant,
E. E. HENDERSON,
District Deputy Grand Master of the Oddfellows of Peterborough.

CLASS B.

What the Fire Underwriters Association Require.

Councillor McNeil, Chairman of the Fire Water and Light Committee, received this morning a communication from Mr. McLean, Secretary of the Fire Underwriters Association, giving a statement of what Peterborough would require in order to be rated in class B insurance rating.

The Secretary says that first of all a team will have to be kept in the stable at the fire station. A system of electric ward alarms, are wanted to communicate with the engine room and central telephone office. Mr. McNeil proposes to have the alarms numbered so that the firemen will know exactly where the fire is located. The Secretary agrees to this and suggests, if this cannot be done, that the number of rings might designate the location of the fire. Besides this two chemical extinguishers, not chemical engines, as the council appeared to think on Monday night, would be required. These can be purchased for $40 and as to the rest of the appliances, they can be added without much expense. The running of the wires would cost but little and the call boxes would not be at all expensive. As for the team, there is one on hand now.

The Secretary concludes his letter with assuring Councillor McNeil that the underwriters association are anxious to meet the demands of towns like Peterborough which are making laudable efforts to improve their fire protection appliances.

Considering the immense advantage to be derived by being placed in class B., the Council would be fully justified in making the proposed expenditure.

Personal.

Master John Anderson, who won the five dollar gold piece as the best writer in the Collegiate Institute, received his preparatory training under Mr. J. J. Rooney, Principal of the Ashburnham Public School. Careful training always tells.

Mr. W. S. Eberman, of St. Paul, Minn., Secretary of the Minnesota State Dairy Commission, is in town, staying with Mr. R. W. Perrit, to whose neice he is married. While on a vacation tour, Mr. Eberman is taking the opportunity of informing himself of the official precautions taken here to insure the purity of milk, etc.

The Heat.

The thermometer ranged between 85 and 90 in the shade to-day. In the sun it went over 100.

The Beginning of Consumption.

Blotches, pimples, eruptions, "fever-sores," ulcers and enlarged glands, are but so many outward manifestations of poisonous and scrofulous humors in the blood, which sooner or later are apt to attack the delicate tissues of the lungs, causing ulceration and consumption of these organs. Be wise in time and use Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," the greatest blood-purifier, pectoral and strength-giver yet known to medical science. It cures all these dangerous maladies having their origin in the blood, if taken in time.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

THE EGYPTIAN CONVENTION.

A Triumph of French Diplomacy That Seems to Please England.

PARIS, July 19.—The Temps, Voltaire, and other papers regard the failure of Sir H. D. Wolff's mission as a victory for French diplomacy. They say the Sultan awaited the result of the French national fete before refusing to ratify the Egyptian Convention.

LONDON, July 19.—The Standard says: If France should again importune us on the evacuation of Egypt the non-ratified Convention provides us with a conclusive answer. We have henceforth only to consult our own conception of the duty we owe Egypt and Turkey and ourselves.

ACCEPTED.

The Town Council Agrees to Mr. McLean's Proposals.

A special meeting of the Town Council was held on Tuesday afternoon, when the proposition made by Mr. J. McLean, Secretary of the Fire Underwriters' Association, was officially considered.

Councillor McNeil presented the letter written by Mr. McLean received by him on Monday, in explanation of the last communication.

The Council was unanimous in accepting the offer of the Underwriters' Association. The Mayor was authorized to write to Mr. McLean stating that the extra team of horses would be kept continually in the stable at the Central Fire Hall and that electric alarms and two "Babcocks" would be procured immediately. The appliances, he was instructed to say, would be completed by August 1st, on which day the Underwriters' Association was asked to place Peterborough in Class B. rating.

The difference in the insurance rate is from 5 to 10 per cent. and the new rating covers the whole town, outskirts as well as the business part. The saving annually to the insuring public will be from $2,500 to $3,000 a year.

Scott Act.

At the Police Court this morning Mr G. Mitchell, through his Solicitor, Mr. C. W. Sawers, pleaded guilty to an infraction of the Scott Act. A fine of $100 was imposed. J. Curtin produced a lease in his case. He hadn't been keeping the refreshment stand for some time. Up till now His Worship had succeeded in making a hole in every lease presented to him in Scott Act cases but on this one he was stuck. County Crown Attorney Wood, who appeared for the prosecution, adjusted his spectacles after questioning the defendent closely for half an hour and remarked that he was sure there was some "shannagan" about the affair. Mr. W. A. Stratton appeared for the defendent. The case was dismissed.

Canton Peterborough.

At a meeting of the Patriarchs of Mount Hebron Encampment held on Tuesday evening it was decided to institute a canton in Peterborough. The formal establishment of the Canton will take place during the visit of the Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., during August. Patriarch R. Nimmo, who takes great interest in the militant branch of the order has offered to provide the charter. Twenty members applied for the charter, and as soon as it is received it is likely the membership will be increased to 50 or 75. The canton costume is very tasteful in design and workmanship. Each costume costs from $60 to $150.

SEAL FISHERY SEIZURES.

A British Steamer and an American Schooner Seized in Alaskan Waters.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Cy the Alaska Commercial Company's steamer Dora, which came in yesterday from Ounalaska, information is received of the seizure of two vessels for sealing within the limits prescribed by the United States Government. The vessels are American schooner Challenge, from Settle, W. T., and the British steamer Annie Beck, hailing from Victoria, B. C. Both seizures were made by the U. S. revenue cutter Richard Rush, and the vessels and crews were sent on to Sitka. The Annie Beck was seized near St. George, which is not far from Ounalaska. As in the case of the Challenge, there was blood on the deck and the crew appeared as if they had been hard at it. Her captain sent up a protest and threatened to seek redress from the British Government. The cases of both vessels will be tried at Sitka.

THE GLADSTONE POLICY.

Lord Granville and Lord Roseberry Confident that it Will Carry.

BOSTON, July 19.—The inaugural meeting of the reconstructed London counties Liberal Union was held last evening.

Lord Granville pointed out that in 1844 Mr. Disraeli expressed an opinion as to the solution of the Irish problem which substantially agreed with Mr. Gladstone's proposals. If the Liberals worked hard their success would be absolute and complete.

Lord Roseberry attributed the political degeneration in the home counties to the influence of Villadom. Property was a sacred word to the inhabitants of Villas, but they were leaning on a broken reed in the present Government. In the last general election, doubtless the country thought that the Irish question required further discussion, and therefore returned the Tories to power in order to suspend judgment for a while; but the recent elections had shown that the country had made up its mind in favor of the Gladstonian policy.

TORIES AND UNIONISTS

A Complete Fusion Expected to be Announced by Lord Salisbury.

LONDON, July 19.—A complete fusion of the Liberal-Unionists and the Tories is now almost certain, and the programme of the augmented ministerial party will probably be outlined in the speech from Lord Salisbury will deliver at the Carleton Club today. The new programme is believed to consist of a land bill which shall be even more generous than the numerous Unionists amendments to the present bill would make that measure, and to administer coercion in Ireland so mildly that the people of that country will find it next to impossible to realize that the bill, which their representatives in Parliament fought so stubbornly, is a veritable law of the land. The carrying out of this programme will, it is expected, weaken the opposition of the Irish members at once, and ultimately attract many of them to the support of the Government. A Tory Cabinet, so filled with confidence, certainly ought to succeed, but the Tory Cabinet that attracts Irish support will be likely to comprise as its most elderly members the grandsons of the men who are now fighting for Home Rule. The request of Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, that the Government suspend evictions until after the passage of the Land Bill will probably be acceded to by the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and the intimation that the Government has decided to act in deference to the Archbishop's wishes is taken as additional evidence that the Government is really as anxious to mollify the Irish element as it was a few weeks ago to convince them that they were criminals and must be treated as such.

THE SULTAN'S DILEMMA.

Threatened With a Ministerial Crisis and an Open Rupture With England.

LONDON, July 19.—The threatened changes in the Turkish Cabinet, while they may not reach the extent of a crisis, are likely to put an end to further negotiations between England and the Porte for some time to come. It seems that all through the discussion of the Egyptian treaty the labors of Sir Henry Drummond Wolff were hampered by the opposition of certain members of the Turkish Cabinet, and it was only at earnest solicitation of their colleagues that they were induced to refrain from putting such obstacles in the way of the negotiations that would have been tantamount to a gratuitous insult to the British special commissioner. By some persons who claim to be well informed on the subject, it is alleged that this opposition was instigated by the Sultan himself, but others assert that although the Sultan may have tacitly encouraged the action of the hostile ministers, he did not go to the extreme of causing them so to act personally. It is believed the Sultan is in favor of a treaty with England defining the status of Egypt and the powers of Great Britain and the Porte in governing and protecting that country upon lines similar to those upon which the lately formulated agreement was based, but he at an early stage of the negotiations discovered that there was a strong feeling against such a convention, and it is pretty well know that he did not care to oppose it too obstinately. Other considerations, however, entered into the matter at a still later stage, and the Commander of the Faithful became thoroughly convinced that he had better allow the convention to die a natural death. The Sultan's wish that Sir Henry Drummond Wolff should delay his departure from Constantinople, is not believed to be due to a desire to re-open negotiations, but simply to ward off an open rupture with England as long as possible, or at least until the imminent ministerial troubles are settled.

INTENSELY BITTER FEELING.

Between France and Germany—What Visitors to Europe Say.

CHICAGO, July 19.—A Washington special to the News says: "People who have just returned from Europe, after sojourning in France and Germany, unite in saying that we cannot properly realize in this country the bitter feeling that exists between the people of those two countries, and which is exhibited in numerous ways in the affairs of every day life." A gentleman who is a close observer said: "At Vichy I saw a young Prussian officer hooted out of the town simply because he was a German. This pent-up bitter feelings must some day break out in a ware such as civilization has never yet seen. Its beginning will find France united as one man; it needs but a very limited residence in Germany for one to see and recognize that to-day the Germans are far ahead of any nation in Europe in everything which relates to the art of war The country seems to be thinking of nothing but its army, and the thought is always that that army shall soon again find its way to France. When it does it will find different material to cope with from what it met at the last visit."

Destroyed by Earthquake.

EL PASO, Texas, July 19.—Close upon the news of the earthquake at Bavispe came the details of a still greater calamity at Baccariacs, a town twenty miles from Bavispe. It had before the catastrophe 1,200 inhabitants. When Bavispe was destroyed the town was badly shaken up and most of the inhabitants fled. Since then the town of Baccariaca has been visited by a succession of shocks that have reduced the whole town to ruins. Most of the people escaped as they fled to the country terror stricken when the disturbance first commenced.

Akoutan in Eruption.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—The schooner Dora, from Oun, Alaska, reports that the volcano of Akoutan, on the Island of Akoutan, one of the group, is in a state of eruption. The natives state that eruptions almost constant since the middle of May. Loud explosions occur every few minutes. A large quantity of rock is thrown up hundreds of feet into the air, and at night numerous streams of lava can be seen coursing down the mountain sides, illuminating the whole country. Earthquake shocks are also frequent.

Steamer Grandholme Ashore.

QUEBEC, July 19.—The steamer Grandholme which passed through last evening from Montreal bound to Sydney, C. B., is ashore at Kamouraska in a bad place. The vessel grounded on a falling tide and has received damage, but to what extent is not known here yet. Messrs. Carbray, Routh & Co., have despatched the tugs Lake and Dauntless to her assistance, and every effort will be made to get the vessel off. The machinery is also said to be injured from the pressure of the vessel on the ground.

A Violent Storm.

BALTIMORE, July 19.—The storm of yesterday afternoon was followed by another of almost equal force about three o'clock this morning. Great damage was done in the city and vicinity. Harley Park, the most beautiful resort within the city, presents an appearance of desolation. Unroofed houses are to be seen all over the western section of the city and the aggregate damage is heavy, though the individual losses are comparatively light.

Mortality for June.

OTTAWA, July 19.—The monthly mortuary returns, published to-day, state that the deaths in the larger cities of Canada during the month of June were as follows:—Montreal, 716; Toronto, 157; Quebec, 145: Ottawa, 70; Kingston, 16; Winnipeg, 21; Sherbrooke, 13; Sorel, 18; St. Hyacinthe, 12. There were 243 deaths from diarrhoeal affections in Montreal during June, 18 violent deaths, 26 from diphtheria, 7 from typhoid fever and 5 from measles.

Child Burned to Death.

OTTAWA, July 19.—Clara Demers, a nine year old girl, was playing with two companions at New Edinburgh this morning. The children were alone in the house and got hold of some matches. Clara's dress caught fire from a match, and before she could be helped the clothes on her were burnt to a crisp, and the child herself so severely injured that she died shortly afterwards.

The Oka Indian Dispute.

OTTAWA, July 19.—The Deputy Superintendent General of Indian affairs says the latest trouble at Oka is entirely outside the jurisdiction of the Department, as the ownership of the land there has already been decided by the highest courts, and the department will not interfere in any purely religious dispute.

Studying Commercial Union.

KINGSTON, July 19.—C. R. Denett, of the Chicago Times, is in the city, interviewing business men and manufacturers as to commercial union. He leaves to-night for Montreal, and then goes to the Lower Provinces.

Believed to be in Canada.

NEW YORK, July 19.—Ex-alderman McCabe, who is under indictment for bribery in the Broadway Railway matter, is believed to have gone to Canada. Though adjudged a lunatic, he has remained at large under a bail of $20,000.

More Deaths from the Heat.

CINCINNATI, July 19.—There were 71 prostrations from the heat yesterday, of which 21 were fatal.

PHILADELPHIA, July 19.—There were 31 deaths from the heat yesterday.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

DOM PEDRO AT MADRID.

MADRID, July 19.—Senor Moretta, Minister of Foreign Affairs, to-day received, in behalf of Queen Christine, the Emperor and Empress of Brazil. The royal visitors subsequently visited the Colonial Exhibition. They will leave for France to-morrow.

THE POTATO BUG IN SAXONY.

BERLIN, July 19.—The Colorado beetle is ravaging the potato fields in Prussian Saxony, and fears are entertained that the crop will be a total failure.

COMING MEETING OF MONARCHS.

LONDON, July 19.—The Berlin correspondent of the Daily News says an arrangement has been made for a meeting of Emperor William and the Czar in September, near Danzig, on the occasion of the German army manœuvres.

CHOLERA IN ITALY.

CATANIA, July 19.—Forty-two cases of cholera and 25 deaths from the disease were reported here to-day. Of 117 soldiers already attacked, 62 have died. An exodus of the inhabitants is beginning.

SEEKING A LOAN.

COLOGNE, July 19.—The Gazette and other papers affirm that the Reichs Bank intends to restrict loans on Russian securities. Also that Russia is treating with the Credit Lyonnais and the Banque de Paris for a gold loan of 20,000,000.

AFRAID OF ITALY.

PARIS, July 19.—M. Jouvencal has presented in the Chamber of Deputies a bill proposing the formation of a corps of 30,000 men especially to protect the Italian frontiers in the event of Italy assisting Germany against France.

CONSERVATIVE ELECTED.

LONDON, July 19.—The election in the Basingstoke division of Hampshire, to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation to the peerage of Mr. G. C. Booth, Conservative, was held to-day. Mr. Jeffreys, Conservative, was elected, receiving 3,158 votes against 2,420 for Mr. Eve, Liberal. The Conservative votes shows a falling off of six hundred and the Liberal vote a gain of one hundred as compared with the election of 1885.

A KING CAPTURED.

PARIS, July 19.—The Courier du Soir has advices stating that King Merodom of Cambodia has been captured by his brother Livotha, the leader of the insurgents. The King, the despatches say, caused an ambassador sent to him by his brother to be beheaded.

A CENTENARY CELEBRATION.

PARIS, July 19.—Several hundred deputies, senators, city officials and journalists of all shades of Radicalism have addressed an appeal to the Republicans of France to organize a celebration of the centenary of the 1789 movement, to be equally directed against the Moderate Republicans and Imperialists.

THE ROYAL ASSENT GIVEN.

LONDON, July 19.—The House of Commons went formally in a body to the House of Lords this afternoon, when the Royal assent was given to the Irish Crimes Act Amendment Bill, and it was thus made the law of the realm.

CANADIAN HORSES.

LONDON, July 19.—In the House of Commons to-day Right Hon. E. Stanhope, Secretary for War, intimated that the Government did not think it desirable to continue importing army horses from Canada. Those which had already been imported from Canada, he said, were good, but the price required for them was too high. Henceforth the War Department would get the horses it needed at home.

TWO CONSERVATIVES RETURNED.

LONDON, July 19.—In the election for member of Parliament for the Brixton division of Lambeth to-day, Mr. Carmathan, Conservative, received 3,307 votes, and Mr. Hill, Gladstonian, 2,569. At the last election Mr. Bagally, Conservative, polled 3,300 votes, and Mr. Cookson, Home Ruler, 1,886. A Parliamentary election was also held today in the Hornsey division of Middlesex, resulting in the return of the Conservative candidate, Mr. Stephens, who polled 4,476 votes, against 2,488 for his Gladstonian opponent, Mr. Bottomley. At the last election at Hornsey Sir J. McGarel Hogg, Conservative, was returned without opposition.

THE LEAGUE AND THE ACT.

DUBLIN, July 19.—At a meeting of the National League to-day Lord Mayor Sullivan, who presided, said that the whole league was prepared to stand its ground, defy the Coercion Act and take the consequences. Mr. Crilly declared that the means to nullify the Coercion Act were ample, and that the Nationalists would treat the act with supreme contempt.

SEEKING FOR SATISFACTION.

LONDON July 19.—In the House of Commons to-day Mr. T. M. Healy (Parnellite) asked the Speaker if the time was not opportune for bringing before the House the conduct of Sir Robert Nichols Fowler (Conservative), ex-Lord Mayor of London, and now a member for London, in calling Mr. George Howell, Home Rule member for Northwest Bethnal Green, "a damned liar." The Speaker said Mr. Healy was not entitled to put such a question. The incident occurred in March and peace had since been made between Mr. Howell and Sir Robert Fowler. Mr. Sexton gave notice that he would move for the suspension of Sir Robert Fowler for one month. [Parnellite cheers.]

LAND BILL AMENDMENTS.

LONDON, July 19.—The Standard says that Lord Hartington has submitted to the Government a proposal to reduce 15 per cent. all judicial rents fixed before January, 1886, and to submit the matter to the courts in case objection is made by the landlords. The Unionists, the same paper says, oppose Mr. Morley's amendment to the first clause of the land bill.

Pain-Killer will cure Cramps or Pains in any part of the body.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

The Daily Review

WEDNESDAY, JULY 20, 1887.

A BOSTON VIEW.

THE leading organs of public opinion in the United States, however much they may differ in their views, all agree in giving no encouragement to the Butterworth-Wiman crusade. The Boston Journal says:—

"Canada is as much a part of the British Empire to-day as Pennsylvania is a part of the United States, and Great Britain would no sooner permit Canada to make a commercial union discriminating against British trade than the United States would permit Pennsylvania to make a similar arrangement with England."

The Journal, while right in the main, appears to overlook one difference in the two cases. The United States would no more permit Pennsylvania to withdraw from the Union (for it would amount to that) than it permitted the Southern States to do so, but would prevent it by force of arms. The British Empire on the other hand would not be likely to attempt to retain the Dominion by force, if the people of Canada should judge it to be for their advantage to claim absolute independence, but would reluctantly though peacefully let us go. But do the people of Canada wish to abandon the mother country, to cut themselves adrift from the rest of the empire, in order to form an alliance with a foreign nation? There are very few who would think it either right or expedient.

PUBLIC DEBT.

SOME Canadians, who are never so happy as when they are pointing out assumed advantages of the United States over our Dominion, are fond of reiterating that we are increasing our public debt, while our neighbours are diminishing theirs. If they wish to make a fair comparison they should not conceal the fact that if we adopt the policy of the United States, paid no subsidies to the Provinces, but left the people in each Province to meet their local expenditures by direct taxation, the sums thus saved and applied to the reduction of our debt, would wipe it out quite as quickly as our neighbours are doing. Indeed, under the United States system, our debt would be nearly wiped out already, for the assumption of Provincial debts and the payment of Provincial subsidies since Confederation (neither of which is practiced by our neighbours), amount to a sum which, if returned to us, would leave our Dominion public debt at an absolutely insignificant figure. Are those who tell our people that the United States are better off than us in regard to public debt, prepared to ask our people to meet the question in the same way as our neighbours, by direct taxation for Provincial expenditures, to say nothing of higher import duties, and excise duties that amount to nearly twice as much a head?

DIGBY ELECTION.

THERE have been four bye elections since the last general election, and all four have resulted in favor of the Conservative candidates. The last instance is the return of Mr. Jones, the Conservative candidate, for Digby, N. S., by a majority of 31 over Mr. Robicheau, the Reform candidate. The constituency has hitherto vacillated considerably in its political leanings. In 1878 it gave a Conservative majority of 18, in 1882 a Reform majority of 252, in February, 1887, a Conservative majority of 116, and now a Conservative majority of 31. Mr. Robicheau was chosen by the Reformers in order to secure the considerable French vote on the "National" cry, but as may be seen they miscalculated in adopting this expedient which did not bring them success.

THE Toronto Mail refers to us editorially as follows:—

"The Peterborough REVIEW labors under the belief that the American coal producer made it a point to pay the late duty on anthracite because he feared that unless he did so the Canadians would abandon the use of hard coal and would use Nova Scotia soft coal in their self-feeders instead. The American producer must have survived his mistake, if, as the Government organs say, he is now making the Canadian consumer pay the equivalent to the duty, though no duty upon anthracite is collected."

We may remark that the Mail invents for us the assertion that the American coal producer feared Canadians would use Nova Scotia soft coal in their self-feeders instead of hard coal, for we have said nothing of the kind. We know here, if they do not in Toronto, that soft coal can be used in grates, and that coke can be used in self-feeders if anthracite is not handy. We also know that coal is used for other purposes besides heating dwellings, and that soft coal and coke can replace anthracite for these purposes. The "American producer" made no mistake from the point of view of his own interest; he found out the amount he could obtain for his coal in Ontario without causing Nova Scotia coal to be used in preference, and he now asks the same price, or rather more, poeketing the amount of the duty, while still excluding Nova Scotia coal as before. Does the Mail think that the Canadian consumer paid the duty on anthracite coal?

REFERRING to the fact that $700 in fines were imposed in South Ontario in one week for violation of the Scott Act, the Globe says:—

"All over the Province the authorities are evincing a resolute determination to enforce the law. It is becoming very evident that the Inspectors and County Magistrates are in sympathy with the Act, and that the strongest restraints and checks are being put upon the illicit sale of liquor."

Is this true? One thing is certain, that in localities where the Scott Act is the law liquor is being freely sold. While convictions are secured and fines imposed, the amount of the fines frequently aggregates about the sum of the license fees formerly prevailing. Now, if it be true that the Inspectors are doing all they can to enforce the Act, the Act itself is no better or worse than the license law; but if the Act itself is better than the license law, then the officials are not enforcing it. Friends of the Act can consider whether it is with the Act or the officers that the fault lies.

NAVIGATION IMPEDED.

To the Editor of the Review.

DEAR SIR,—The Government boom between Young's Point and Lakefield is in a bad state. The anchors were dragged in some places last winter, and this allowed the boom to swing out and forces the steamer out of her channel. Very soon if this state of things is not altered, the boats will be [illegible] as they are obliged [illegible] and get their planking torn open by the bolts which workmanlike(?) project two or three inches from the boom. I believe the official in charge has been notified, but it seems to have no effect. Possibly a word in the papers drawing attention to it, would be more beneficial. Would you kindly insert one.

Yours truly,
A. I. Wright.

OTONABEE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

OBITUARY.—On Saturday night Mrs. Blezard, wife of Mr. Thomas Blezard, M. P. P., passed away after a lingering illness. Although she had been ill for a long time with consumption, Mrs. Blezard was not confined to the house, and on Thursday drove out. Mrs. Blezard's maiden name was Mary Mickle, and she was married to Mr. Blezard in 1864. She leaves two sons and two daughters, besides her husband, to mourn her loss. The funeral took place on Monday afternoon to the Westwood cemetery, and the very large attendance showed the esteem in which she was held. The funeral was one of the largest ever seen in the township. Mr. Blezard and family have the sincere sympathy of the community.

TOWNSHIP CLERK.—Mr. George Read having resigned the office of Township Clerk and Treasurer, which he has filled for so many years to the satisfaction of the whole township, it has become necessary to choose his successor. The choice of the Township Council has fallen upon Mr. Jas. Drummond, whose farm is situated north of Mather's Corners. Mr. Drummond is Secretary of the Otonabee Agricultural Society, and is also President of the Reform Association of the Township.

Terrible Train of Accidents.

The disaster at St. Thomas brought in its train a remarkable series of accidents. The collision first killed several people and broke an oil tank. The burning oil set fire to two cars and burned up several more persons. The heat from the burning cars caused an oil tank to explode, killing and burning many others. The explosion frightened a team of horses and they ran away, killed a woman and hurt several people. The blazing oil set fire to a number of buildings and a child was burned to death. The late excursion train from Port Stanley was delayed four hours by the blockade, and a young lady waiting for it fell off the pier at Port Stanley in the dark and was drowned. Thus the first crash was responsible for all that followed, down to the last life lost at Port Stanley.—London Advertiser.

Queen's College Endowment.

KINGSTON, July 18.—The canvas in the interest of the new endowment fund for Queen's College has resulted in the raising in the city alone of $43,000 outside of the gift of $10,000 by Mr. Carruthers and to be devoted to the erection of a council hall.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc.

"How long have you been here?" he asked of his retainer.

"About four days, baas."

"Did you take my letter to Om Croft's?"

"Yah, baas, I gave it to the missie."

"What did she do?"

"She read it and then stood like this, holding on to the veranda pole;" and he opened his mouth and one eye, and twisted up his hideous countenance into a ghastly imitation of Bessie's sorrow stricken face, catching hold of one of the posts that supported the hut to assist in the performance.

"So she believed it?"

"Surely."

"Well, we are going there to-morrow."

"So, baas! I knew that before you told me."

"We are going there, and we are going to take the place; and we are going to try Uncle Silas by court martial for flying an English flag, and if he is found guilty we are going to shoot him, Hendrik."

"So, baas," said the Kaffir, rubbing his hands in glee; "but will he be found guilty?"

"I don't know," murmured the white man, stroking his golden beard; "that will depend upon what missie has to say; and upon the verdict of the court," he added, by way of an afterthought.

"On the verdict of the court, ha! ha!" chuckled his wicked satellite. "On the verdict of the court, yes! yes! and the baas will be president, ha! ha! One needs no witchcraft to guess the verdict. And if the court finds Uncle Silas guilty, who will do the shooting, baas?"

"I have not thought of that; the time has not come to think of it. It does not matter; anybody can carry out the sentence of the law."

"Baas," said the Kaffir, "I have done much for you and had little pay. I have done ugly things. I have read omens and made medicines, and 'smelt out' your enemies. Will you grant me a favor? Will you let me shoot Om Croft if the court finds him guilty? It is not much to ask, baas. I am a clever wizzard, and deserve my pay."

"Why do you want to shoot him?"

"Because he flogged me once, years ago, for being a witch doctor, and the other day he hunted me off the place. Besides, it is so nice to shoot a white man. I should like it better," he went on, with a smack of the lips, "if it were missie, who set the dog on me. I would."

In a moment Frank Muller had the astonished [illegible] throat, and was kicking and shaking him as though he were a toy. His brutal talk of Bessie had appealed to such manliness as he had in him, and, whatever his own wickedness may have been, he was too madly in love with the woman to let her name be taken in vain by a man whom, though he held his "magic" in superstitious reverence, he yet ranked lower than a dog. With his nerves strung to the highest possible state of tension, and half drunk as he was, Frank Muller was no more a person to be played with or irritated than a mad bull.

"You black beast!" he yelled, "if you ever dare to mention her name again like that I will kill you, for all your witchcraft," and he hurled him with such force up against the wall of the hut that the whole place shook. The man fell, lay for a moment groaning and then crept from the hut on his hands and knees.

Muller sat scowling from under his bent brows and watched him go. When he was gone he rose and fastened the door behind him, and then suddenly burst into tears; the result, no doubt, of the mingled effects of the drink, mental and physical exhaustion and the never resting passion (one can scarcely call it love) that ate away at his heart like the worm that dieth not.

"Oh, Bessie, Bessie!" he groaned, "I have done it all for you. Surely you cannot be angry when I have killed them all for you? Oh, my darling, my darling! If you only knew how I love you! Oh, my darling! my darling!" and in an agony of passion he flung himself down on the rough pallet in the corner of the hut and sobbed himself to sleep.

Somehow Frank Muller's evil doing did not make him any the happier, the fact of the matter being that to enjoy wickedness a man must be not only without conscience, but also without passion. Now Frank Muller was tormented with a very effective substitute for the first, superstition, and his life was literally overshadowed by the last, for the beauty of a girl possessed the power to dominate his wildest moods and inflict upon him torments that she herself was incapable of even imagining.

At the first light of dawn Hendrik crept humbly into the hut and woke his master, and within half an hour they were across the Vaal and on the road to Wakkerstroom.

As the light increased so did Muller's spirits rise, till at last, when the red sun came up in glory and swept away the shadows, he felt as though all the load of guilt and fear that lay at his heart had departed with them. He could see now that the two Boers being killed by a flash of lightning was a mere accident—a happy accident, indeed; for had it not been for that he himself would have had to kill them, if he could not by any other means have got the warrant from them. As it was he had forgotten the warrant; but it did not matter much, he reflected. Nobody would be likely to find the bodies of the two men and horses under the lonely bank there. Certainly they would not be found until the aasvogels had picked them clean. They would be at work upon them by now. And if they were found it was probable that the paper would have rotted or blown away, or, at the worst, be so discolored as to be unreadable. For the rest, there was nothing to connect him with the murder, now that the two accessories were dead. Hendrik would prove an alibi for him. He was a useful man, Hendrik. Besides, who would believe that it was a murder? Two men were escorting an Englishman to the river; somehow they became involved in a quarrel; the Englishman shot them, and they shot the Englishman and his companion. Then the horses plunged into the Vaal and upset the cart, and there was an end of it. He could see now how well things had gone for him. He was practically placed beyond suspicion.

And then he fell to thinking of the fruits of his honest labors, and his cheek grew warm with the mounting blood, and his eyes flashed with the fire of youth. In two days—forty-eight hours—at the outside, Bessie would be in his arms. He could not miscarry now; he was in absolute command there. Besides, Hendrik had read it in his omens long ago. Moolfontein should be stormed on the morrow if that were necessary, and Om Silas Croft and Bessie should be taken prisoners; and then he knew how to put on the screw. That talk about shooting on the previous night had been no idle threat. She should yield herself to him or the old man should die, and then he would take her. There could be no legal consequences from that now that the British government was surrendering. It would be a meritorious act to shoot a rebel Englishman.

Yes, it was all plain sailing now. How long had it taken him to win her—three years? He had loved her for three years. Well, he would have his reward; and then, his mind at rest about his passion, he would turn it to those far reaching, ambitious schemes of which the end was something like a throne.

CHAPTER XXVII.

SILAS IS CONVINCED.

At first Bessie was utterly prostrated by the blow that had fallen on her, but as time went on she revived a little, for hers was a sanguine nature with a great deal of elasticity about it. Troubles sink into the souls of some like water into a sponge, and weigh them down almost to the grave. From others they run off as the water would if poured upon marble, merely wetting the surface. She was neither the one nor the other of these, but rather of a substance between the two—a healthy, happy hearted woman, full of beauty and vigor, made to bloom in the sunshine, not to languish in the shadow of some old grief. Women of her stamp do not die of broken hearts or condemn themselves to lifelong celibacy as a sacrifice to the shade of the departed. If No. 1 is unfortunately removed, they, as a general rule, shed many a tear and suffer many a pang, and after a decent interval very sensibly turn their attention to No. 2.

Still it was a very pale faced, quiet Bessie who went to and fro about the place after the visit of the one eyed Kaffir. All her irritability had left her now; she no longer jumped down her uncle's throat about his having dispatched John to Pretoria. Indeed, on that very evening after the evil tidings came, he began to reproach himself bitterly in her presence for having sent her lover away, when she stopped him.

"It is God's will, uncle," she said, quietly. "You only did what it was ordained that you should do." And then she came and laid her sunny head upon the old man's shoulder and cried a little, and said that they two were all alone in the world now; and he comforted her in the best fashion he could. It was a curious thing that they, neither of them, thought much of Jess when they talked about being alone. Jess was an entirely thing apart even from them. When she was there she was loved and allowed to go her own way; when she was not there she seemed to fade into outer darkness. A wall came down between her and her belongings. Of course they were both very fond of her, but simple natured people are apt to shrink involuntarily from what they cannot understand, and these two were no exception. For instance, Bessie's affection for her sister was a poor thing compared to the deep and self sacrificing, though often secret, love that her sister showered upon her. She loved her old uncle far more dearly than she did Jess, and it must be owned that he returned the compliment with interest, and in those days of heavy trouble they drew nearer to each other even than before.

[illegible] to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. A matter was brought up by the Victoria salesmen with reference to the action of Mr. Brentnell, who purchased their cheese on last market day. They said that Mr. Brentnell went out the day after, inspected two factories, and told them to deliver on such a day. After going to the expense of boxing and hiring teams to draw the cheese to the station, Mr. Brentnell was not there when they arrived to deliver, nor had he been there to make any arrangements whatever.

Mr. BRETNELL defended himself by saying that the Inspector for his house, Messrs. Laing & Sons, Montreal, finding that the patrons took whey home in their milk cans, refused to accept the cheese.

The PRESIDENT of the Board recognized that this would be a reason for rejecting the cheese, but Mr. Brentnell could not be excused for refusing to take the cheese from the two factories whose cheese he had inspected. He censured Mr. Brentnell for doing such a thing.

Bids being asked for, the market was opened at 9 cents for Peterborough section. From this figure the bids ran rapidly up to 10 cents for Peterborough, Fitzgerald being the bidder. The bidding ceased and the factories being called off, all sold. For the Victoria section the highest offer was made by Mr. Flavelle, of Lindsay, namely, 9¼ cents. The salesmen refused this offer, and the Board gave them permission to dispose of their cheese as they wished.

THE WAR OF A YEAR.

THE TOWN AND COUNTY AT LAST EMBRACE EACH OTHER.

And Decide That They'll Not Quarrel Any More Over Scott Act Fines—The Turn of Events from May 1st, 1886, to the Present.

The great Scott Act fight which has been waged by the Town and County for the past year or more has at last come to an amicable end. Lawyer Moore representing the Town Council, and Lawyer Burnham representing the County Council, have agreed that the two corporations should disagree no longer and the consequence is that Lawyer Dumble has been euchred out of his prospective fees.

The contest has been, of course, carried on in a strictly constitutional manner, as became such decorus bodies as the two councils referred to. It has quite a history. First the county men chuckled over the advantage they obtained and then the town representatives smiled as they related the way the tables had been turned. Finally a lawsuit cast its ominous shadow before and both bodies very sensibly came to the conclusion to deal fairly with each other and settle the dispute.

From the first of May until August or the beginning of September the Scott Act fines were imposed by Police Magistrate Dumble, who like Pooh Bah, occupied diverse positions, being Magistrate for both Town and County, and the disposition of the fines was not settled. The Government then issued an Order-in-Council giving all fines imposed within cities or counties to such cities or counties for the enforcement of the Act. When the Town Council saw what was done there was quite an excitement. They passed a memorial and Mayor Stevenson and Councillor Moore were despatched to the Capital in hot haste. They explained to the Minister of Justice that the Town occupied a peculiar position being separated from the County for municipal purposes. They said that the Order-in-Council did them a great injustice, as the County would get a large amount of money which rightfully belonged to the Town. This was about two months after the passing of the first Order. The Minister had the first Order cancelled and another was passed, setting forth that all fines imposed in any incorporated town separated from the county in which it was situated for municipal purposes, should have all fines imposed within such incorporated town. This was apparently fair; but another difficulty arose. The Magistrate was the servant of both Town and County and had imposed fines upon County people for infractions of the law. Quite a large amount of fines rightfully belonging to the county was dejure the property of the town. The contest was waged more hotly than ever. His Worship rather than see the town get county money held court all over the county, so that the fines might be imposed outside of the town. He risked an action against him and paid over $625 of county fines which had been paid to him personally. But the clerk of the Police Court subsequently received some $550 more of county fines and some Town Councillors were disposed retain this in payment of police service, Police Court occupacy, and the employment of their Magistrate to try the cases. In the meantime the County authorities had been carrying on a correspondence with Ottawa to get a reversal of the last order. They were not successful, however, the answer being that they should arrive at an agreement with the Town. The County gave the kaleidoscope another turn and new colors made their appearance. A claim was set up that if the Town rested upon Orders-in-Council instead of upon equity the County Council would do so also. They claimed that by the first Order-in-Council they could rightfully claim the whole of the Scott Act fines inflicted within the Town as well as County from the 1st of May, 1886, till the passing of the Order-in-Council which Mayor Stevenson and Councillor Moore obtained. It was claimed that the first Order-in-Council was retrospective while the second was not. The Town's champions contended that no such construction could be placed upon the first Order-in-Council. The County Council, however, were so sure of their case that they at their last session ordered an action to be taken against the Town for the recovery of the whole of these fines, Mr. Dumble being retained by the County. A short time after this the Mayor and Mr. Burnham talked the matter over, and both agreed that it would be a fair settlement if the town would pay over the $550, County fines. Councillor Moore, at the last meeting of the Town Council, moved the resolution to the effect that this amount be paid in full settlement of all claims the County had against the Town in regard to Scott Act fines. Some of the Councillors were still disposed to exact pay for the use of the town police and police court, but Councillor Moore's motion carried.

A release will be made out by the Warden and County Clerk, and the County and Town will join hands once more.

THE UPWARD MARCH.

Sixty-Two Pupils for the Institute Next Term.

The examiners of the entrance examination papers have finished their work and the result is herewith given. The extraordinarily large number of 62 are qualified to enter the Collegiate Institute next term. Altogether 74 wrote at the examination. The Central School sent up 45 candidates of whom 38 were successful; the Convent School sent 6, and the whole number were successful; Keene sent 1 successful candidate, as did Ashburnham, Fairmount, No. 2 Ennismore, No. 4 Ennismore, No. 1 Smith, No. 9 Smith, and Harvey No. 8. The four sent by No. 1, Ennismore all failed. No. 4, Smith, passed 4 out of 5, and No 5, Smith, passed 2. No. 1 and No. 3, Monaghan, each sent 2 and the whole four passed. The failures were in literature, arithmetic, grammar, geography and history. The drawing was weak, showing no improvement since last examination.

Those who received 378 marks and over were successful.

The following is a list of the names of the successful candidates:—

GOVERNMENT CONCESSIONS.

What the Press Says of the Carlton Club Meeting.

LONDON, July 20.—Mr. Chamberlain was the principal agent in conducting the negotiations between the Government and the Unionists.

The Standard says: "The Government can afford to treat with good humored indifference any criticisms that may be directed against it on account of its desire to avoid giving offence to the Unionists. Since the main object of the connection of the Unionists and Conservatives is to maintain union, it stands to reason that that the Government is bound to consult the wishes of its allies, even at a partial sacrifice of its own preferences."

The Post reiterates theory for unity among the Unionists. It says: "The source of the weakness will be apparent as long as Lord Salisbury is compelled to declare himself in a minority. A new appeal should be made to the Unionists to take their places in the ministerial ranks."

The News says: Lord Salisbury has capitulated in terms that do honor to his cynical frankness. The Government has betrayed the Irish landlords for the sake of union and office.

A MOTHER'S TERRIBLE DEED.

Kills One Child and Supposed to Have Murdered Two Others.

BATHURST, N.B., July 20.—A case of infanticide is reported from Caraquet, near this place. An unmarried woman, named Mary Ross, the mother of three illegitimate children, in under arrest for killing her infant child. A neighbour heard cries of pain issuing from a room occupied by the unnatural mother, and on entering found her with the child on her knees. A horrible sight met her gaze. A spoon had been forced down the child's throat so hard that it broke before it could be extracted, and the child died in terrible agony. An attempt had previously been made to choke the child, but failed, the spoon being used as a last resort. An inquest was held, when Dr. Meehan testified to the women's insanity, and she will be taken to the asylum. There is a suspicion that the two other children were also got away with by unfair means.

THE MURDER OF BISHOP SEGHERS

Killed by a Servant Sixty Miles From Any Human Habitation.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July 20.—Further information from Ounalaska state that Bishop Seghers was murdered by his companion one night in November last. The scene of the tragedy was on the banks of the Yukon river, about 500 miles from its mouth, and fully sixty miles from any human habitation. The murderer is Frank Fuller, a young man from Portland, Oregon, who accompanied the bishop as a companion and servant. He gave himself up, but no cause for the deed is given. The bishop was formerly of Baltimore, Md., and prior to being named as Bishop of Alaska was the Archbishop of Oregon and Washington Territory.

Guns too Big.

NEW York, July 20.—The Sun says that it is learned from private letters of a naval officer that serious damage was done to the deck of the cruiser Atlanta by the firing of her eight-inch guns during the recent tests at Annapolis. It is alleged that guns of that calibre will be too large for use on the Atlanta and her sister ship the Boston.

Cricket Match.

The Belmont Cricket team, of Philadelphia, Pa., arrived in town yesterday and registered at the Grand Central Hotel as follows:—F. Allison Scott, Walter Scott, Crawford Coates, M. S. Lynch, S. R. Colladay, T. H. Mason, R. W. Steel, T. W. Muir, E. W. Beitzel, C. F. Seeger, T. M. Wilson, A. M. Wood, M. C. Work and T. Pacey. The Peterboroughs went to the bat first and scored fifty runs. When play was stopped for lunch at about two o'clock the Belmonts had 142 on the tally board and 7 wickets down.

A BIG OIL BLAZE.

The Standard Oil Company Suffer Severe Loss.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Half a million dollars' worth of property of the Standard Oil Company disappeared in smoke early this morning. One of the largest fires that has yet visited the gigantic corporation at Constable Hook, N. J., broke out after midnight. Two large warehouses three immense tanks, four big docks and about 10,000 barrels of oil were licked up by the destroying element leaving nothing but a smouldering mass of ruins.

When the firemen arrived at the oil works they found that the large frame house at the lower end of the works was on fire. As work is carried on by night as well as by day there was a strong force of men about the place, and these were summoned. As lines of hose are always kept at the fire pumps about the place, several streams of water were soon playing on the fire. The arrival of the firemen was, however, none too soon, as the flames were making great headway, being carried by the wind in the direction of half a dozen large tanks that intervened between the burning structure and a large warehouse. As the building in which the fire broke out was of wood, it was not long before it was a mass of flames.

The firemen turned their attention to saving the tanks and other property in the neighborhood. At the same time the oil was being pumped out of the tanks by means of the underground pipes. Despite the efforts of the firemen the tank nearest the fire became over heated and a column of flame burst from the top of it. This drove the fire fighters back so they had to abandon a second tank which was separated from the burning one by only a few feet. It was not long before this was a mass of flames also.

Things then began to assume a threatening aspect. The Standard people, seeing their danger, telegraphed to their works at Greenpoint for assistance. Five powerful tugs were sent from that place, and they arrived at Constable Hook at 1.40 o'clock. Though the firemen kept throwing powerful streams upon it, a large frame warehouse, used also as a cooper shop, caught fire and was soon blazing. For about half an hour the firemen kept the destroying element from crossing the dozen feet that still intervened, and they might have saved the threatened building had not a piece of the base of the tank burst and hurled burning fluid in against the structure and fired it. Being stored with inflammable material, it was speedily licked up by the flames, which then got beyond control and swept down the river.

At the docks there had been a large number of vessels. These had, however, been towed out into the stream, but none too soon. Frst one pier took fire, then another and another until the four large piers were also in flames, casting a lurid glare upon the waters of New York bay. By this time the tugs had arrived, and they fought the fire from the water. Each of them threw several streams upon the burning piers, and it was only the efforts of the men on the tugs that checked the spread of the flames, and saved the factories and lumber yards along the water front. On the land side the fire had also been got under control, and the office, storehouse and neighboring tanks were saved.

By 6 o'clock the fire was under control, and by 10 o'clock, with the exception of two tanks that were still ablaze, had burned itself out.

The loss is estimated at about $1,500,000.

Deaths from the Heat.

CHICAGO, July 20.—At the lowest estimate 130 persons have met their deaths within the last few days in Chicago, either directly from sunstroke or from the effects of the extreme heat, besides 263 babies, less than a year old, have succumbed. "There has never been anything like it in the city at any previous time," said the Coroner. "I can't see what we are going to do," he continued. "The number of bodies awaiting the verdict of the Coroner's jury is hourly increasing. It will take days with our present force before our work on the present dead can be finished. Some complaints have already come to us. I wonder that there are not more."

A Woman Speculator.

NEW YORK, July 20.—The woman who, under the name of Miss Hopkins, disappeared from the Pacific mail steamer on her last trip from San Francisco to Panama has been identified as Miss Josephine Haywards. She was well known in San Francisco as a speculator in wheat and stocks and is said to have been equally familiar on Wall street. Her broker was Edward Cahill, who bought her steamer ticket here for this last trip. she left diamonds in a safe deposit company worth several thousand dollars. No cause was given for her suicide save that she lost heavily on the recent wheat deal.

A Noted Convert.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Lazarus S. Murada, a converted Mohammedan, died yesterday at his home in this city. He was born in Bethlehem, Judea, in 1824, and was converted to Christianity many years ago by American missionaries. This led to his imprisonment by his father, but he escaped, and has since resided in England and America. He was finally educated and devoted himself to religious and educational literary work.

Anti-Clerical Cries.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 20.—The anniversary of the death of President Juaréz was observed with great enthusiasm yesterday. Along the line of march the procession was greeted with applause and cries of "Death to the priests" were frequently heard, the populace taking the celebration to mean an anti-clerical demonstration.

Why Were they Poisoned?

NEW YORK, July 19.—The veterinary surgeons of the Third Avenue Surface Railway Company have examined the stomachs of eighteen horses of the Company, which died suddenly last week, and announce that all the unfortunate brutes were poisoned by cyanide of potassium.

THE EGYPTIAN QUESTION.

LONDON, July 20.—Everybody in London except the Government officials perhaps is entirely satisfied with the outcome of the Egyptian treaty business, and the belief is almost general that the country will in the end be the gainer by the failure of the Sultan to ratify the agreement.

PERIL OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Danger the Presidental Party were in and their Calmness.

The story of what occurred inside of President Cleveland's special train, which narrowly escaped being wrecked on Saturday last, is told as follows by one of the passengers: "We had been running at a high rate of speed ever since leaving Clayton. The track ahead of us was clear to Alder Creek, and we were not to make another stop before getting there. The party was rather fatigued after the day's jaunt, and the conversation was not very lively. I remember hearing the three shrill whistles of the engine and a moment later the steam was flying against the windows like rain. At that moment Supt. Hammond, who was in a forward compartment of the car, came hurrying in and pulled the safety rope. The steam and the whistling had led me to believe that something was the matter, and the action of the Superintendent confirmed my fears.

"Mrs. Cleveland was talking quietly with Mrs. Kernan, and evidently had not the slightest suspicion of danger. I looked at the President. He sat there calm and dignified, as usual, but it was plain to see that he had seen all that I had and was on the alert. There were others of the men, including Commissioner Kernan, who apprehend serious danger, but nobody moved or said a word to alarm the ladies. The train came to a stop after running about two miles, and when we went out on the platform we found the fireman, who had crawled over the tender, soaked with steam. He said the engineer had jumped or been thrown from the cab when the accident occurred. He didn't know what was the cause of the trouble, and we couldn't tell right away, because the steam was still escaping in a cloud from the boiler. Supt. Hammond promptly sent out men to flag the night express, which was following close behind us, and others were sent back to look for the engineer. He was found lifeless and mangled near the whistling post. The railway ties all the way back were nicked two or three inches deep, and many of them had actually been pounded into splinters by the threshing of the broken rod."

SMITH.

HUCKLEBERRIES.—Mr. Purser, of Buckhorn, if doing a large business in huckleberries. He ships to Peterborough on an average from 50 to 75 pails per week with a good profit.

BUCKHORN ROAD.—There have been some improvements made on the road from Buckhorn south to McKee's Corner, a distance of five miles. Seven hundred and fifty dollars have been granted for that purpose from three sources, the Township $250, County $250 and the Government $250.

PICNIC AND CONCERT.—The congregation of the Methodist Church on the Sixteenth Concession, Smith, held a picnic and open air concert in the afternoon and evening of July the 8th in Montgomery's Grove, for the purpose of raising funds to paint and beautify the church. The concert was fair. Previously when the church had an entertainment the Trustees had to borrow an instrument, but the new organ presented to the church last winter by Messrs. Nichols and Trennum comes in very nicely, for which the thanks of the Trustees are due.

BELLEVILLE.

ATTACHED BY A BOAR.—Mr. Anson Jones, was attacked by a large Berkshire Boar this morning whilst in the pen feeding the animal. The brute has large tusks and lacerated the calf of his leg in a horrible manner before he could escape.

THE KALAPORE CUP.

LONDON, July 20.—At the Wimbledon shooting contests to-day for the Kolapore Cup, the English marksmen won the prize, scoring 719 points. Canada was second, making 663 points and took a prize of £80.

IRISH JUDICIAL RENTS.

LONDON, July 20.—The power of the Irish Commissioners to reduce judicial rent will be valid for two years, at the end of which time it is expected that the Purchase Bill will be in operation.

Over-Salting Butter.

Mr. E. B. Biggar, who, at the Colonial Exhibition, last summer, became somewhat famous by his advocacy of flax culture in Canada, has just communicated to Mr. W. H. Lynch, author of "Scientific Dairy Practice," the following interesting points on salting butter for English trade:—

"The point urged in your pamphlet, that Canadians over-salt their butter, is very important. Canadians in London may notice that what Londoners look upon as the best butter, tasts rather flat. This is because there is comparatively little salt in it. It was the common verdict that the very best samples of our butter at the Colonial Exhibition were not liked, for this reason; and some complained to me that there was even a bitter twang to it, resulting probably not only from excess of salt, but from salt of a poor quality, or at least having chemical elements which should not be present. The latter fact may account partly for the early rankness of some samples of our butter. The fact is that Canadians eat more salt in their food than Englishmen do and if they wish to regain their hold on the English market they must make a radical change in the use of salt in their butter." To which Mr. Lynch writing from Danville, Que., adds that the true interests of our dairymen demand a reform in the direction of lighter salting. Well-made, light-salted butter will satisfy the English liking, already educated to it, and it will educate our own people to that liking; all of which means profit to the butter maker, from the increased demand and perhaps higher price.—Monetary Times.

LAND FOR ALL.

It is a farce to pretend that industrious or deserving persons, any one in whose hands land would yield the greatest return, are excluded from the use of land. No one in this country is excluded, except by his own choice, his improvidence, his want of prudence, of industry, of virtue. Land is offered free to all who will improve it; and under any system of division no more could be done. None are excluded who do not exclude themselves; and to them land would be valueless, in their hands it would be useless to the community, because it would bear no product.—Monetary Times.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

TO BE SURRENDERED.

LONDON, July 20.—Mr. Gladstone, last evening, addressed a select company which had assembled to form a branch of a Women's Liberal Federation, of which Mrs. Gladstone is president. Referring to yesterday's meeting of Conservatives at the Carlton Club he said: "It has gone abroad that this great fortress requiring to be defended by the Government to the best of its power, and to the last moments of its existence, is to be surrendered to the evidence offered by the by-elections.

BERLIN, July 20.—The funeral of Alfred Krupp took place at Essen yesterday, and was very imposinz. The Prince of Reuss represented the Emperor. There were 12,000 workmen present. Letters of condolence were received from Emperor William, the Crown Prince, Prince Bismarck and Count Von Moltke.

THE BULGARIAN SITUATION.

LONDON, July 20.—Prince Ferdinand, the ruled-out ruler of Bulgaria, still hesitates to start on his proposed visit to St. Petersburg, where, in the hope of propitiating the Czar, he was to have gone last week. It is unlikely, however, that he has lost anything by the delay, and he might defer his trip indefinitely without disadvantage. The Czar is determined to upset the present Bulgarian authorities and his agents are intriguing to that end. The contention of Russia has been ever since the establishment of the temporary government now in power at Sofia that the regents do not represent the people, and the Czar will never recognize the acts of a Sobranje elected under their rulership. If the various Russian agencies now at work with the object of unhorsing the regency can accomplish their purpose a fresh election will follow, a new Sobranje will elect a prince and Russia will accept. It is claimed by Russian partisans that a representative Bulgarian assembly will not elect an Austrian or a German prince.

CONCESSIONS.

LONDON, July 20.—The Times, referring to the concessions made by the Conservatives to the Liberal-Unionists in regard to the Land Bill, says the Government was probably moved less by fear that their allies would desert them than by a preception of the importance of their doing nothing to weaken the position of the dissidents.

AN INSANE BARON.

PARIS, July 20.—Baron Seilliere, the rich Frenchman who was placed in a lunatic asylum by his relatives, who charged that he was insane over imaginary fortunes he had made in America, has been released from the asylum.

BRITON ASSURANCE.

LONDON, July 20.—The Court of Appeal have approved of the scheme for the reconstruction of the Briton Medical and General Life Assurance Association on the basis of a reduction of policies, which had been opposed by the Canadian policy-holders.

SUMMONED TO APPEAR.

LONDON, July 19.—The Speaker of the House of Commons has sent a messenger to Ireland to notify Dr. Tanner that it is imperatively necessary for him to be present in the House on Thursday to answer the charges that he used violent language toward Mr. Long in the lobby of the House last week.

ASSISTING BUSINESS.

LONDON, July 20.—The Unionists subcommittee held a meeting in the House of Commons last night and approved the concessions made by the Conservative meeting at the Carlton club. The committee resolved to offer no further opposition to the land bill, and to assist the Government to their utmost in the despatch of business.

THE "TIMES" AND THE LEAGUE

LONDON, July 20.—The Times to-day summons the Government to settle the National League at once by proclamation, and have it all out before Parliament rises.

THE CHOLERA.

ROME, July 20.—From twelve to fifteen deaths from cholera are reported at Catania daily. Cases of cholera are reported at Francofonte, Palermo and Grotten.

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE.

LONDON, July 20.—Mr. Howell has notified Mr. Fowler that he will call the attention of the House of Commons to Mr. Fowler's conduct in calling Howell a "damned liar."

FREEDOM OF THE CITY.

DUBLIN, July 20.—In compliance with a request made by the Parnellite members of the House of Commons, Lord Mayor Sullivan has called a meeting of the Municipal Council for Friday, when the freedom of the city will be conferred on Mr. William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, and the Hon. Patrick Collins, of Boston, Mass.

EMIN BEY HEARD FROM.

ZANZIBAR, July 20.—Latest reports brought from the interior by traders show that Emin Bey was in good health in March, and was projecting an expedition to further explore the Kakibbi River, an immense stream which he discovered in September. It is thought he may meet the Stanley expedition in Usongora. King Mwanga still refused to grant Emin Bey permision to leave the country.

A LEAGUE CONVENVION.

CORK, July 20.—Five hundred delegates and one hundred and fifty priests attended a National League convention here yesterday. Mr. William O'Brien presided. He said the object of the meeting was to organize a campaign for the assistance of tenants. The seven members of Parliament for County Cork, Mr. John Dillon and other Commoners, were present. Resolutions were adopted in accordance with the object of the Convention, as stated by Mr. O'Brien.

A DENIAL.

LONDON, July 20.—Sir Robert Fowler, Conservative member of Parliament for London, writes to the Times denying that he used the strong language towards Mr. Howell, which that gentlemen imputes to him.

THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1887.

A FISCAL POLICY.

THE full reports that have now come to hand of the discussion in the House of Lords regarding our new iron duties have several very satisfactory features. Though the old free trade theories were invoked against our action, there were other speakers who firmly maintained the right of the Dominion to frame its own tariff without interference, that our tariff is for the benefit of Canada, and that it is not aimed at British manufactures. The able speech of Lord Dunraven was especially favorable to Canada. He showed by conclusive facts and figures that the tariff we have adopted has given a decided advantage to the manufacturers of Great Britain over those of the United States, while developing the industries of our country, and is for these reasons beneficial to the Empire as a whole. As to the special cause of discussion, the new iron duties, he showed plainly that the trade was falling from the hands of Great Britain into those of the United States, and therefore argued that in providing for the establishment of this important industry in our own country we were adopting a policy directed not against Great Britain but against the United States.

In his concluding remarks in reference to he fiscal policy of the different parts of the Empire, he gave a valuable indication of the trend of opinion among the well-informed portion of the community in the Mother Country. After alluding to the fact that the British Parliament had not, like Canada, made any approach towards framing its tariff so as to give any advantage to other parts of the Empire as against foreigners, and dwelling on the growing importance of this question, he went on to say that:—

"He had no hesitation in saying that, in his opinion, the commercial policy which gave perfect freedom of action to every quarter of the Empire in its own internal arrangement, and which at the same time offered a united front against the commercial invasion of foreign countries, was a policy, which, at any rate, would have to be very carefully considered some day by statesmen in this country."

This is the direction in which the people of all parts of the Empire should endeavour to shape their policy. It is the policy advocated in the Canadian branch of the Imperial Federation League, that the various members of the Empire, while framing their own tariffs at their pleasure, whether on the general principles of free trade or protection, should all unite in adding or imposing a discriminating duty against foreign imports. It is gratifying to see that this idea has the sanction and support of one so well informed and able as Lord Dunraven.

OF course if Mr. Cluxton does not find it convenient to give us at present the comparative prices in Canada and the United States of farm products we must wait till October, to learn from him which is the best market for our farmers. In the meantime Mr. Cluxton completely gives away his case by saying that he must wait till Canada is shipping to the United States. Canadian farmers (like those of the United States) are now shipping very largely, but it is to Great Britain. Mr. Cluxton, however, does not venture to give the comparative prices on both sides of the line, of the cheese and cattle that both countries are now shipping to Great Britain, for to do so would be to expose the gross inaccuracy of his friends in stating that our farmers would gain largely by free access to United States markets for their cheese and cattle. As to the question of prices for railway ties and lumber it is more complicated, but though we would have preferred to conclude the discussion as to farm produce, before being sent by way of diversion to another branch of the subject, we will take up this matter as soon as we can obtain trustworthy information as to prices and freights. We are not, like the Commercial Unionists, in mortal terror of the plain figures of actual transactions.

THE Globe, which shares with the Mail the position of being leading organ of the Annexationists, hopes "that from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pole there shall really be but one people." We cannot pretend to feel the same hope.

IRELAND.

It is rumoured in Ireland that Prince Albert Victor will be the next viceroy of Ireland.

Owing to the drought Ireland is now the Emerald Isle only in name; the grass is growing gray; the whole of the North-West is threatened with ruined crops and the cattle are dying from heat and the want of water.

The Flax Supply Association of Ireland has issued a long report regarding the state of the flax crop. It is mentioned that the present protracted drought is causing much anxiety, and it is much against the lengthening out of the stalk.

During the month of May 442 licenses were granted in Ireland to carry arms, and 26 applications were refused. Amongst the permissions to have arms were 140 for revolvers. Eight search warrants for arms were granted, and nine convictions obtained.

According to the Dublin Irish Times a proposal of Mr. Henry Bourke that by means of a public subscription each member of the Irish Constabulary should be presented with a sum equivalent to one's days pay in appreciation of their bravery and loyalty is meeting with much favor.

The last Drumcollogher Cork County Fair, was very dull. The depression in the cattle trade, the cessation of shipping, and the prolonged drouth had their effect on it.

On June 20th a fatal case of sunstroke occurred in Derrygonnelly, County Armagh. A young girl received a stroke while walking along the road. She never recovered consciousness, and died shortly afterwards. The thermometer registered over 80 deg. in the shade.

Michael Curran, son of Michael Curran, P. L. G., was attacked and beaten at Aughalough, near Carrickallen, County Leitrim, on Sune 22nd. His assailants afterwards fired a revolver shot, wounding him in the leg. It is believed he will identify them. They are still in custody.

News reached Castlerea, Roscommon County, on June 21st, that a young man named Michael Egan, who left there lately for the United States, when out only three days, was swept overboard. He left with his sister, a young girl. Much sympathy is felt for his mother, who is a widow.

The Baroness Burdett Couts has fixed the 17th of August as the day on which she will open the Baltimore Industrial Fishing Schools. She purposes arriving in Cork harbor on the 13th, making visits around the harbor on the 16th, and arriving in Baltimore on the 17th, where she will spend two or three days, and she will give, on the 18th, a gold cup valued at a hundred guineas, for a yacht race, together with several prizes for fishing vessels.

SOUTH DOURO.

From a Correspondent.

PERSONAL.—Mr. John Sullivan has returned home from his trip to the west. He had a fine trip. He saw the jubilee celebrations in Port Hope and Toronto and then went on westward. He visited Niagara Falls and went up to see Brock's monument. He crossed to Buffalo and then went on to Chicago and other western points. Mr. Sullivan, who is a close observer, says that the farmers of Canada appear to be thriving better than the United States farmers, so far as the districts he saw were concerned. The crops over there are considerably dried up, having suffered much drouth. Mr. Sullivan came home by way of Rochester, where he paid a visit to friends there.

NOT RIGHT.—The gentleman who went up to see the Burleigh works last week is agitated over a report that is circulated here to the effect that a South Douro Grit had been appointed Inspector of the Works merely to get his vote at the next election. He says that he voted for Johnny Macdonald all his life—in Lower Canada and Upper—but if he's going to do this he'll go back on him. But its all nonsence. Johnny wouldn't do the like.

FROM ALL OVER.

The French Government have decided to ignore the Laur-Boulanger incident.

Telephonic communication has been established between Hamburg and Berlin.

Headache, Billiousness, Dyspepsia and Indigestion relieved and at once by Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. Try it. Samples free.

The traffic receipts of the Canadion Pacific Railway for the week ending July 14th were $236,000, an increase of $21,000 compared with the corresponding week last year.

It is reported that Manitoba flour has almost completely crowded Oregon flour out of British Columbia, 80 per cent. of the flour trade in that Province being already secured by Manitoba.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It will do you good. Sold by all Druggists. 50.

An extra of the Canada Gazette was issued on Tuesday, announcing the disallowance of the Act passed by the Manitoba Legislature intitled "An Act for Further Improving the Law."

The annual statement of the post office savings bank branch for the last fiscal year shows an increase in deposits of $2,838,378, the greatest in any year since Confederation except in 1880 and 1881. The average amount to the credit of depositors last year was $216, the largest on record.

Good progress is being made with the construction of the Red River Valley Railway. The Manitoba Government have been notified that Mr. Ryan has contracted with a Montreal firm for six thousand tons of steel rails for the line, the first shipment of which will be made early in August over the Canadian Pacific Railway.

OVER WORKED Women

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

But as time went on they both began to hope again. No further news of John's death reached them. Was it not possible, after all, that the whole story was an invention? They knew that Frank Muller was not a man to hesitate at a lie if he had a purpose to gain, and they could guess in this case what the purpose was. His furious passion for Bessie was no secret to either of them, and it struck them as at least possible that the tale of John's death might have been invented to forward it. It was not probable, more especially as he was not present to urge his suit, but it was possible, and however cruel suspense may be, it is at least less absolutely crushing than the dead weight of certainty.

On Sunday—it was just a week after the letter came—Bessie was sitting after dinner on the veranda, when her quick ears caught what she took to be the booming of heavy guns far away on the Drakensberg. She rose, and, leaving the house, climbed the hill behind it. On reaching the top she stood and looked at the great solemn stretch of mountains. Away, a little to her right, was a square, precipitous peak called Majuba, which was generally clothed in clouds. To-day, however, there was no mist, and it seemed to her that it was from the direction of this peak that the faint rolling sounds came floating on the breeze. But she could see nothing; the mountain seemed as tenantless and devoid of life as the day when it first towered up upon the face of things created. Presently the sound died away, and she returned, thinking that she must have been deceived by the echoes of some distant thunder storm.

Next day they learned from the natives that what she had heard was the sound of the big guns covering the flight of the British troops down the precipitous sides of Majuba mountain. After this old Silas Croft began to lose heart a little. The run of disaster was so unrelieved that even his robust faith in the invincibility of the English arms was shaken.

"It is very strange, Bessie," he said, "very strange; but never mind, it is bound to come right at last. Our government is not going to knock under because they have suffered a few reverses."

Then came a long four weeks of uncertainty. The air was thick with rumors, most of them brought by natives, one or two by passing Boers, to which, however, Silas Croft declined to pay any attention. Soon it became abundantly clear, however, that an armistice was concluded between the English and the Boers, but what were its terms or its object they were quite unable to decide. Silas Croft thought that the Boers, overawed by the advance of an overwhelming force, meant to give in without further fighting; but Bessie shook her head.

One day—it was the same on which John and Jess had left Pretoria—a Kaffir brought news that the armistice was at an end, that the English were advancing up to the Nek in thousands and were going to force it on the morrow and relieve the garrisons—a piece of intelligence that brought some of the old light back to Bessie's eyes. As for her uncle, he was jubilant.

"The tide is going to turn at last, my love," he said, "and we shall have our innings. Well, it is time we should, after all the shame and loss and agony of mind we have gone through. Upon my word, for the last two months I have been ashamed to call myself an Englishman. However, there is an end of it now. I knew that they would never give in and desert us," and the old man straightened his crooked back and slapped his chest and looked as proud and gallant as though he were 25 instead of 70.

The rest of that day passed without any further news, and so did the following two, but on the next, which was March 23, the storm broke.

About 11 o'clock in the forenoon Bessie was employed upon her household duties as usual, or rather she had just finished them. Her uncle had returned from making his after breakfast round upon the farm and was standing in the sitting room, his broad felt hat in one hand and a red pocket handkerchief in the other, with which he was polishing his bald head, while he chatted to Bessie through the open door.

"No news of the advance, Bessie dear?"

"No, uncle," she replied, with a sigh, and her blue eyes filling with tears, for she was thinking of one of whom there was also no news.

"Well, never mind. These things take a little time, especially with our soldiers, who move so slowly. I dare say that there was some delay waiting for guns or ammunition or something. I expect that we shall hear something by to-night"——

He got as far as this, when suddenly the figure of Jantje appeared, flying up the passage in the extremity of terror and haste.

"De Booren, baas, de Booren!" (The Boers, master, the Boers) he shouted. "The Boers are coming with a wagon, twenty of them or more, with Frank Muller at their head on his black horse, and Hans Coetzee, and the wizard with one eye with him. I was hiding behind a tree at the end of the avenue, and I saw them coming over the rise. They are going to take the place," and, without waiting to give any further explanations, he slipped through the house and hid himself up somewhere at the back out of the way, for Jantje, like most Hottentots, was a sad coward.

The old man stopped rubbing his head and stared at Bessie, who was standing pale and trembling in the doorway. Just then he heard the patter of running feet on the drive outside, and looked out of the window. It was caused by the passing of some half dozen Kaffirs who were working on the place, and who, on catching sight of the Boers, had promptly thrown down their tools and were flying to the hills. Even as they passed a shot was fired somewhere from the direction of the avenue, and the last of the Kaffirs, a lad of about twelve, suddenly threw up his hands and pitched forward on his face, with a bullet between his shoulderblades.

Bessie heard the shout of "Good shot, good shot!" and the brutal laughter that greeted his fall, and the tramping of the horses as they came up the drive.

"Oh, uncle!" she said, "what shall we do?"

The old man made no answer at the moment, but going to a rack upon the wall, reached down a Westley-Richards falling block rifle that hung there. Then he sat down in a wooden arm chair that faced the French window opening on the veranda, and beckoned to her to come to him.

ENGLAND.

The rivers of England are very low and the fish, it is said, are dying by hundreds in the small streams.

The Queen has commissioned Mr. Nicholas Chevalier to make a water color drawing in which are to be epitomized all the chief incidents of the children's fete in Hyde Park.

In Swansea, Wales, owing to the drought many of the inhabitants are rationed from a water cart and water is sold in the streets at a penny a can. What water there is in the public reservoirs is hardly fit to drink and some people have been glad enough to take what they could find in a disused coal pit.

At the Winnington Park Cricket-ground, Northwhich, while Mr. John Hayes, of Gorstage Hall, son of Mr. Hayes, of Ashton Hayes, was engaged in the game, he was overcome by the heat and fainted, but recovering in a short time he recommenced playing. A few minutes afterwards he dropped dead.

One morning recently three shops at Dudley Wood, an outlying portion of Dudley, were more or less damaged by canisters of gunpowder being thrown down the chimneys and exploding in each case. The roofs were blown off. The reason assigned for the outrage, which has caused great excitement in the district, is that the shops were used by chain hands, who, it is said, were working at a reduction.

The effect of the protracted drought has been painfully apparent at the markets and cattle fairs held lately in Cumberland and Westmoreland. The pastures are so burnt up that they will not yield sufficient sustenance for stock. Farmers are therefore rushing their cattle and sheep into the market and selling them at a considerable sacrifice. Seeds are scorched down to the roots and turnips and similar crops are suffering terribly.

As Queen Victoria was travelling from Balmoral to Windsor, just before her Jubilee, her special train was brought to a stop at Hincaste Junction, about five miles south of Kendal, on account of the absence of the signal light, which should have shown the track to be clear. On inspecting the light it was found that an enormous swarm of bees had settled on the signal, putting out the light. The signal man dared not interfere with the swarm to relight the lamp.

According to the London Court Journal an elderly maiden lady, living near Sidcup, wrote to the Lord Chamberlain a few weeks ago saying that she believed every class of her Majesty's subjects would be represented at the Abbey excepting one, "the old maids" of her Majesty's dominions, and she asked for two tickets to have the honor of representing the old maids, wishing to have a lady friend to accompany her. In due course she received a polite reply from Lord La'mas, saying that he was "quite unable to resist the force of her argument, and would therefore send her a ticket for the Abbey, whither, of course, the old lady went on Jubilee day.

SCOTLAND.

A long-continued drought has caused great scarcity of water in various towns and villages in Scotland.

The Culbican and Kinnord sections of the Marquis of Huntly's Aboyne estate, 9,300 acres, have been sold to Mr. C. H. Wilson, M.P. for Hull, for £45,000.

The freedom of the city of Edinburgh was conferred upon Mr. Andrew Carnegie on the 8th July, in recognition of his gift of $250,000 to the city with which to establish a free public library.

The shipping launched on the Clyde during last month amounted to 17,071 tons, some 500 tons less than for the same month last year; but for the six months the output is 9,326 tons above that for the same period last year.

At the Glasgow Circuit Court, on June 28th, the young man Hugh Abernethy, who attempted to murder a young woman with whom he had been keeping company, was—some mitigating circumstances having been allowed—sentenced to imprisonment for twelve months.

Kinblethmonth House, five miles from Arbroath, the residence of Mr. Lindsay Carnegie, was totally destroyed by fire on June 26th. Most of the furniture and the plate and the pictures were got out of the burning mansion, although without suffering injury, but, notwithstanding, the loss is estimated at £15,000.

In the Circuit Court, at Aberdeen on July 1st, Alexander Stewart, who was charged with the murder of a woman near Huntly, put in a plea of guilty of culpable homicide, and this being accepted, he was sent to penal servitude for twenty years. An Aberdeen solicitor named Finlayson was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment for forgery.

One day recently a man with only one leg swam across the Clyde between Kirn and the Cloch, a distance of about two and a half miles. A small boat accompanied him all the way. When he came out of the water opposite the Cloch Inn he was quite fresh.

At Glasgow recently John R. Boyle, aged 13, was sentenced to receive ten stripes with the birch for having mischievously changed the "danger" signal for "clear" at the Caledonian Eglinton street station. Fortunately the signalman noticed it in time to avert a great catastrophe.

A large tract of moorland in the west of Fife, known as Mossmorran, has suffered by the Jubilee celebrations. While bonfires were being kindled all over the country on Jubilee day, a number of youths set fire to the heather, and the moor being in an arid condition the flames spread with great rapidity. A staff of men was unable to get it under till Saturday. About a square mile of the moss has been burned, and part of a valuable game cover is thus destroyed.

"Shortness of breath Caused my death."

is inscribed on a tombstone in an English grave-yard. In all probability it would never have been necessary, if only the poor unfortunate victim of some disease of the respiratory organs had known of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a panacea for all diseases of the throat and lungs. For consumption it is believed to be the only real specific yet known. For all scrofulous and blood diseases it is unfailing.

MR. MOWAT'S PATRONAGE.

Mr. Carman is not the only one with a grievance against his party. He is not the only one who realizes that the right one is not always selected for public position. Nor is he the only one who has spent much of his substance and strength in fighting the battles of Reform, only to be forgotten by the Reformers when the time for his recognition arrives. The Ontario Government has too many pets to care for to warrant the distribution of its favors with impartiality and justice.—Kingston Whig (Reform).

Give them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

RAILED WITH SATISFACTION.

From the fact that the sum of £95,000 per annum is to be saved on the East India and China service, there is an opening for gaining experience on the Canadian trans-Pacific route; and if the Home Government assisted the Canadian Pacific Railway to establish a pioneer undertaking, we should say the majority of the people would hail the encouragement with much satisfaction, as it would then afford additional protection (in case of hostilities) to our commerce in the Pacific.—*Liverpool (Eng.) Toronto Conservatory of Music.

By the calendar of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, just received, it would appear that when that institution opens in September next some forty or fifty teachers will be on the staff, and that practically all branches of music will be taught. The free advantages—including rudimentary musical theory, concerts, lectures on acoustics at University College, on musical history, etc., by the faculty, and lectures by eminent physicians on the physiology and anatomy of the vocal organs and other relevant subjects, which cost the pupils nothing is surprisingly large, and they, to quote the calendar, "will prove highly instructive and enjoyable, and will form an intellectual background of inestimable value to all who wish to acquire with their practical studies an intelligent and comprehensive view of musical art." The outlook for the Conservatory is most promising. 1d17

Resigned.

Mr. George E. Williams, who has since September, 1883, very efficiently filled the position of General Secretary of the Peterborough Young Men's Christian Association, has handed in his resignation to the Directors, and it has been accepted. The resignation will take effect in about three months. Mr. Williams will go to England to assume the Secretaryship of the Young Men's Christian Association of Brixton, London, Eng. His departure from Peterborough will be sincerely regretted by members of the Y. M. C. A. and others engaged in church work, as well as by a large number of friends who have not been actively engaged with him in such service, and when he leaves for his new field of labor it will be with hearty good wishes for his welfare and success. The Directors of the Peterborough Association are making arrangements to secure an efficient successor to Mr. Williams.

THE FOUR GREAT DAYS

OF THE ODDFELLOWS' GRAND LODGE MEETING.

The Programme of the Demonstration Arranged—Hours of Sessions and of Entertainment—A Number of Attractions.

As the time draws near increasing interest is felt in the meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Order of Oddfellows and the demonstration to be held in connection with it. The programme for the four days has been arranged, and, besides the Grand Lodge sessions, of interest to Oddfellows, and especially to delegates, there will be a number of attractions that will draw and entertain the general public.

GRAND ENCAMPMENT.

On Tuesday, August 9th, at 9 o'clock a. m., the Grand Encampment of Ontario will assemble in the Court House, and an address of welcome in behalf of the Patriarchs of Peterborough will be delivered by Mr. R. W. Bell, M. D., P. C. P. On this day the Cantons will arive and the town will be alive with Oddfellows, uniformed and not uniformed. In the evening a promenade concert will be held in the P. A. A. A. grounds, which will be lighted by electricity, and the music will be furnished by the famous Victoria Rifles Band, of Montreal.

CIVIC HOLLIDAY.

On Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock the Grand Lodge of Ontario of the I.O.O.F. will meet, also in the Court House, and will be received by the local members of the Order. Mr. J. R. Stratton, M. P. P., P. G. of Peterborough Lodge, will occupy the chair and Mr. Mowry, N. G. of Otonabee Lodge, the vice-chair. Mr. Stratton will deliver an address of welcome in behalf of the local Oddfellows. The Mayor of the town, Mr. James Stevenson, M.P., who is also P. G. of Otonabee Lodge, will welcome the Grand Lodge in behalf of the citizens of Peterborough. The Grand Lodge will then be opened by the Grand Officers. It will adjourn at noon until 9 a. m. on Thursday, to allow the delegates to take part in the demonstration.

At one o'clock the cantons, encampments, representatives to the Grand Lodge and local Oddfellows, with the bands, will assemble at the Central Park, where the procession will be formed. The procession will pass down George street to the Driving Park. At the Park an exhibition drill, consisting of militantand fancy movements and evolutions, will be given by the cantons. The other events will be a free for all trotting race for a $200 purse, a bicycle race, a foot race, Highland fling in costume, 100 yards dash in heats, sword dance in costume, fat man's race, tug of war between ten chevaliers east and ten west of Peterborough and a consolation race.

On Wednesday evening a second promenade concert, with music by the Victoria Rifles band, will be given in the P. A. A. A. grounds, with an entire change of programme. Bradburn's Opera House has been secured for the same evening and an entertainment will be given there. Arrangements are now being made for an opera company.

EXCURSIONS.

On Thursday the Grand Lodge will be in session, the hours being from 9 o'clock to 12.30, 2 to 6 and 7 to 10. Visitors wishing to take a pleasant trip will have opportunities on this day of doing so. Arrangements have been made for two excursions, one to Stoney Lake, by rail to Lakefield and by boat twenty miles north through beautiful scenery, and the other by steamer Golden-Eye to the attractive resort Idyl Wild in Rice Lake.

On Friday the Grand Lodge will again be in session. The military cantons will depart on this day.

OTHER CONCERTS.

On the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday open air concerts will be given in the Horticultural Gardens and the Central Park by first-class bands.

THE CANTONS.

There will be seven cantons here, some with bands, and they will take part in the demonstration. The Montreal Canton, consisting of thirty men, with the Victoria Rifles Band, will arrive on the C. P. R. at 5.31 on Tuesday morning. The Cantons from Toronto, 40 men, Newmarket, 30 men, Hamilton, 35 men, London, 40 men, and St. Thomas, 25 men, will arrive by the Grand Grand Trunk at 8.40 and by the Canadian Pacific at 10.56 on Tuesday night. The Ottawa Canton, 30 men, will come by the C. P. R. at 6.42 on Tuesday evening. The Belleville Canton, 25 men, and Kingston, 25 men, have not yet intimated at what time they will arrive. This will be the first representative turn out of the Cantons in Canada, and special efforts will be made to make it a success. Lieut.-Gen. Underwood, of Covington, Kentucky, and his staff, will be present. All the bands and Cantons will be the guests of the local Oddfellows while they are in Peterborough. Elaborate arrangements have already been perfected for their entertainment, the Charlotte Street Rink having been secured in which to billet and entertain them.

DECORATIONS.

The business men and citizens will no doubt vie with each other in assisting to make the town look attractive. The Oddfellows have placed the street decorations under the management of Mr. H. W. Watson, and his artistic taste and energy are a guarantee that they will be magnificent.

The Trip to Grimsby Park.

This warm weather naturally makes a person think of a vacation. The next point to decide is where to spend it. The considerations are, cost and the pleasure and profit to be derived. One says, "I have been to Niagara Falls, the Thousand Islands and Stoney Lake, but have never been to Grimsby Park." Upon making inquiry you will find that it is located in the finest fruit growing country in Canada, and commanding a full view of Lake Ontario. You see the announcement that the Fire Brigade will run an excursion to Grimsby Park on July 28th for the small sum of $1.50, return tickets good for several days, with privilege of staying over in Toronto. For cheapness this trip is unequalled. The scenery at Grimsby Park is picturesque in the extreme, and under the able management of the Fire Brigade and Band an enjoyable trip may reasonably be expected. 1d17

Victoria Rifles Band.

It has been decided to bring the famous Victoria Rifles Band, of Montreal, to Peterborough to assist in the Oddfellows' demonstration. They will arrive early on Tuesday morning and will be here two full days. Besides taking part in the parade and demonstration they will furnish music for two promenade concerts, which will be held in the P. A. A. A. Grounds on the evening of Tuesday and Wednesday, Aug. 9th and 10th. The band is a splendid one, consisting of forty-five pieces. They furnish a superior class of music, such as is not often heard. The bringing of them here is a large undertaking, and it is to be hoped that the people will appreciate the spirit the Oddfellows have displayed and that they will sustain them by a liberal patronage of the concerts.

Personal.

The Rev. F. H. Wallace moved into the George street Church Parsonage on Wednesday. His child is, we are pleased to learn, somewhat better.

The Rev. R. Wallace, a Presbyterian clergyman of Toronto, who has been in town several days visiting his son, the Rev. F. H. Wallace, B. D., pastor of the George street Methodist Church, returned home this morning. The Rev. R. Wallace was the first Presbyterian minister some forty years ago, and was well acquainted with Peterborough and vicinity in its early days.

GENUINE French goat boots for ladies' at KIDD'S for $1.75 per pair.

Revolver Found.

Some time ago three boys from Toronto were given shelter in the cells. They had run away from home and were followed by the father of one of them, who said his son had stolen a revolver and cartridges, but these articles could not then be found. Recently men engaged on the sewer from the town buildings found the belt and cartridges, and Acting-Chief Adams has found the revolver, a large one, not far from where the belt was discovered. The boys had evidently secreted them there.

The Electric Alarms.

It is proposed to place the ward electric alarms at the following places:—No. 1 Ward at the corner of Dalhousie and Stewart streets; No. 2 Ward, corner of Downie and Simcoe streets; No. 3 Ward, corner of Park and Elm streets; and No. 4 Ward at the corner of George and Antrim streets. The bells have been ordered and the construction of the lines will be commenced to-morrow.

A SHOCKING CASUALTY.

Fifteen Men killed on the Track by an Express Train.

NEW YORK, July 21.—About 7 o'clock this morning, on the Erie Road, a gang of Italian laborers were at work ballasting, about three fourths of a mile above Hohokus. The Chicago express, which was an hour late, rushed around the curve before the men had the slightest warning, and dashed through them, killing 12 or 15 on the spot and wounding many others. The shrieks of the victims were heartrending, and when the train slowed up the track presented the sickening sight of being covered with mangled bodies, and the rails being spattered with blood and strewn with broken bones and pieces of ragged flesh. Some of the bodies were mangled beyond description and crushed out of semblance of humanity. To most of the victims death must have been instantaneous, but some of them seemed to be in the last throes of death when the train was brought to a standstill. The train waited about fifteen minutes and then proceeded on its way. The conductor of the train said that the train hands of the express were not to blame and said the foreman of the gang should have been on the look out and warned the men of the train's approach.

SECESSIONIST KNIGHTS.

Western Ontario District Assembly Favors Secession.

LONDON, July 21.—The final session of the District Assembly of Knights of Labor was held in Sherwood Hall to day. After a lengthy discussion on the subject of the separation of Canadian Knights of Labor from the American body in the matter of jurisdiction, a resolution was passed urging the secession from the United States General Assembly and the formation of a General Assembly for the Dominion of Canada, the latter body to have complete and unrestricted powers to adjudicate on all questions and business concerned in the order. The District Assembly adjourned to meet next January in Ingersoll.

REPORTED DEATH OF STANLEY.

Said to be Either Killed by Natives or Drowned in Africa.

LONDON, July 21.—A despatch from St. Thomas, West Africa, says the West African Company has received a report that Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, has been shot dead by natives, with whom his expedition was fighting in order to obtain supplies. Another account says that the steamer on which Stanley was proceeding to the relief of Emin Bey was sunk, and that the explorer was drowned. The report of Mr. Stanley's death emanates from a missionary at Matadi, who received it from a native from up the country. No direct message has been received from the expedition.

BRUSSELS, July 21.—Stanley, the explorer, arrived at Arusvimi, and departed on June 2nd for Wadelai.

THE REPORT DISCREDITED.

The rumor regarding the death of Stanley is utterly discredited here. The latest authentic news from him was from Aruwinie, and was sent June 2nd. It would be impossible for a native to reach Matadi and then St. Thomas since that time. The distance between Matadi and Aruwinie alone is a thousand miles through the roughest country.

NO OFFICIAL INFORMATION.

The Government has no information about the reported death of Henry M. Stanley.

DISASTROUS FOREST FIRES.

One Hundred Square Miles of Country in Cape Breton Devastated.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 21.—Disastrous forest fires have been ravaging Cape Breton. A tract of one hundred square miles of country, between Sydney and Cow Bay, has been completely devastated. It is said to be the worst fire known in the island. At one time the reserve coal mine was in great danger. It was entirely surrounded by the flames. Work was suspended in the pit, and for three days all hands were engaged fighting the fire fiend. What made the situation all the more serious was the fact that a water famine prevails at the reserve. Every well, brook and stream in the place is dried up, and all the water for steam purposes in the mine and for domestic purposes for 1,000 people is hauled by train from Black Brook, a distance of eight miles. Coal cars have been made water tight by oakum, etc., and converted into tanks, in which the water is conveyed from the brook to the mines and distributed to the people in carts. In order to supply the demand the train is kept running day and night. The miners, by hard work and strategy, succeeded in preventing the forest fire from reaching the settlement, but were unable to prevent its continuing its devastating course.

A TERRIBLE STORM.

West Virginia Swept by One of the Most Disastrous Storms on Record.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., July 21.—One of the most disastrous storms ever known in this State swept over the counties of Wirt and Wood about dusk last night, doing damage to a large amount, besides seriously injuring a number of people. The deluge of rain and hail seemed to have been most seriously felt about Elizabeth, the county seat of Wirt County, which is reported to be in a serious condition. Houses, barns and other buildings were unroofed or entirely swept away. Thousands of dollars worth of crops were destroyed, and many fine orchards and large tracts of valuable timber were ruined. At Rockport, Woodroe, the large stone mill of George Quirk, was levelled to the ground. White's circus and menagerie was showing at this point, a large crowd being in the tent when the storm broke over the town In a moment the tent was raised from the ground and borne out of sight, while a mad panic seized the spectators, men, women and children being knocked down and trampled on in the rush. Many were badly injured.

THE TANNER INCIDENT.

He Appears Before the House of Commons—Explanation of His Conduct.

LONDON, July 21.—Dr. Tanner (Home Ruler) appeared before the House of Commons this afternoon in obedience to its summons, to explain the charge made by Mr. Long (Conservative), that the doctor had in the lobby and in the presence of several members called Mr. Long a "d—d snob," and used other improper language. Dr. Tanner said he regretted the trouble the House had been put to about the matter Mr. Long's manner and language when he approached him (Dr. Tanner) were part of arrangement to annoy him. Mr. Long twice importuned him, and said in reference to his exclusion from the division (a matter over which he was still very sensitive) "That was a nice sell you got." Dr. Tanner said he was sorry for replying to Mr. Long as he did, and withdrew the indecorous expressions.

Mr. Long arose and denied Dr. Tanner's statements, declaring he did not make use of the alleged words about a sell.

Messrs. George Hawkesworth Bond and James Bigwood (Conservatives) confirmed his statement.

Mr. Patrick O'Hea (Home Ruler for West Donegal) said he was also present and that he heard Mr. Long say "That was a nice sell you got." Mr. O'Hea added that Dr. Tanner was jeered at by Mr. Long and his comrades.

Sir Julian Goldsmid (Liberal-Unionist) urged that the House let the matter drop.

Mr. W. H. Smith said he regretted that he was unable to accept Sir Julian Goldsmid's advice. Dr. Tanner had offered no explanation of his failure to attend the House last Monday when the matter was first brought up. Parliament must mark its sense of his misconduct in some manner. If a month's suspension was too long, the term of suspension would be shortened.

The Fisheries a Failure.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 21.—The fisheries at the Magdalen Islands are reported to be a complete failure.

CANADIAN ROUTE TO THE EAST

Canadians need not despair because the British Government has refused to give to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the exclusive carriage of British mails to the East. The mail contract has been awarded to the Peninsular and Oriental Company for ten years, but the Canadian Pacific is likely to be used as a supplementary line, and the British Parliament will in all probability grant an annual subsidy to its steamships. Perhaps the British people will discover in a few years that the Canadian route is not only much swifter, but safer than that by way of the Suez canal, and if an arrangement is made whereby those who wish to send their letters by the Canadian route may do so, it may come to pass that the Canadian Pacific will get the lions share of the mail. At all events it is not unreasonable to expect that at the expiration of the contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Company the Canadian Pacific will be the favored line. It should be remember that a few years ago the most sanguine Canadians did not expect to see the national railway completed from ocean to ocean before the year 1891, and if anyone had then predicted that within six years after its completion it would become the great highway for British mails and British commerce he would have been laughed at as an optomist. While the contract between the British Government and the Peninsular and Oriental Company cannot be broken there is nothing to prevent the Canadian company from urging British merchants to consider the advantages of our transcontinental line, and those merchants are not bound to ship their goods by the Peninsular and Oriental line for ten years to come. If they can be persuaded that the Canadian route is the safest, the shortest and the cheapest they will not hesitate to patronize it.—Montreal Star.

An immense amount of property has been destroyed by a fierce bush fire at Wilmur, Addington County. The farmers have so far been unable to extinguish the flames, which, it is feared, will continue to rage until quenched by rain.

A circular has been issued by the Marine Department asking the co-operation of all Canadian fishing vessels and fishermen in aiding the protection cruisers in the performance of their duties, especially in ascertaining their nationality.

It is understood that the building for the new Government printing bureau will be erected on ordnance land near Nepean Point. The Dominion Type Foundry Company, of Montreal, has been awarded the contract for supplying the type, etc.

Superintendent Sherwood, of the Dominion police, sails to-day for Belgium with the forger Buzon, it being necessary, according to the extradition treaty between Great Britain and Belgium, that Buzon should be taken back to his native country by a Canadian officer. The Belgian Government will, however, be called upon to refund the expenses of the trip.

Land Tenure in Turkey.

It is not to Turkey that we usually look for ideas in regard to social or economical reforms, but, according to M. Emile de Laveleye, in his book on "The Balkan Peninsula," Turkey is far in advance of the rest of Europe in its system of land tenure. By Mussulman law, the trees planted or buildings set on another man's land form an independent property. The man who has, as a good tenant, built or planted on another's land, may become the owner of the soil at a fair price, if the value of his work is greater than that of the land, which is generally the case in the country. If the culture of the ground ceases for three years, unless the land is pasture or lying fallow, the soil is lost to the owner, and becomes the property of the state. The famous Arabian jurisconsult Sidi-Kebil lays down the following principle: "He who revivifies the dead earth becomes its owner. If the traces of former occupation have disappeared he who revivifies the soil acquires it." According to Mussulman law the general interest limits the rights of the private owner. He may only use and not abuse, and he must maintain the productive power of the land. He is not free to sell to whomsoever he may like. The neighbours, inhabitants of the village, and the tenantry have a right of choice or preference. The Sultan might have given even Mr. Chamberlain valuable hints on land legislation, during the right hon. gentleman's recent interview with him.—Christian World.

A QUEER IDEA.

The Free Press states that London has been importing potatoes from Michigan. This demonstrates the folly of those who claim that "the Butterworth idea" would give Canadian farmers higher prices for their potatoes.—Toronto World.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

COLONIZING MANITOBA.

LONDON, July 21.—The prospectus was issued to-day of the Commercial Colonization Company of Manitoba. Lord Castletown is chairman. The capital of the Company is £400,000 sterling. Its object is to assist in the settlement of emigrants possessing a certain amount of capital along the route of the Manitoba and North-Western Railway. The operations of the Company will be conducted on strictly commercial lines.

GERMAN SOLDIERS ARRESTED.

BERLIN, July 21.—Several soldiers of the Mayence Garrison have been arrested charged with being members of the French Patriotic League. A search of the barracks revealed papers and letters proving that the prisoners were in secret communication with the league committee. A workman at Mulhausen has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment for inducing two Alsatians to enlist in the French foreign legion.

CHOLERA IN ITALY.

ROME, July 21.—Twenty-five deaths from cholera have occurred in Cantania during the past twenty-four hours. The people are panic stricken. Robbers are pilfering the houses whose owners have fled to escape the scourge.

A SPY'S REWARD.

BRUSSELS, July 21.—It it said that the sudden release from a German prison of Danish Captain Saraaw, who was sentenced last year to twelve years' imprisonment for high treason, is his reward for information furnished about the French spy system.

AMENDMENTS TO THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 21.—Mr. Morley has added to his amendment to the Land bill the provision that fair rent be fixed for a term of five years instead of fifteen. The Parnellites meet daily to discuss amendments to the Land bill.

DISTRICTS TO BE PROCLAIMED.

LONDON, July 21.—The Standard says that Clare, Kerry, Galway and West Cork will be proclaimed immediately under the Crimes Act, and other districts will be proclaimed if necessary.

AFGHAN BOUNDARY QUESTION.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 21.—The Afghan boundary question was settled yesterday. Russia receives the territory between the Kusk and the Murghab rivers, accepting, as a result, the English frontier line on the Oxus river, and renouncing her claims to districts to which she would have been entitled according to the terms of the arrangement of 1883.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

PARIS, July 21.—M. DeLesseps has issued a report on the progress of work on the Panama Canal. He renews his protest against the manœuvres of speculators, who, he says, attack the credit of the company in the hope of ruining the enterprise and erecting some sort of cosmopolitan company on its ruins. He announces his intention to visit Panama soon and inspect the canal.

EXPECTED TO DECLINE.

VIENNA, July 21.—The Bulgarian delegates who were sent to notify Prince Ferdinand of his election to the Bulgarian Throne and to urge his acceptance are leaving Vienna. They are disappointed with the result of their mission. It is the general opinion that the Prince will formally decline the throne.

The St. Thomas Disaster.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., July 21.—A representative of the Westinghouse Air Brake Company from Pittsburg was in the city to-day for the purpose of finding out if the brakes on the cars of the ill-fated passenger train were defective, as reported. This was not the case, however, as the stop cocks on the reservoirs beneath the cars were found to be closed and the air pipes were entirely devoid of air. It was the duty of the trainmen to examine the brakes before leaving Port Stanley, but this they failed to do. Had the brakes been in proper order the accident would undoubtedly never have happened. A number of experienced engineers who have examined the wrecked engine state that Engineer Donnelly had used every possible means to avert the calamity.

North-West Coal.

OTTAWA, July 21.—Mayor Stewart, of this city, President of the Canadian Anthracite Coal Company, and Mr. Scarth, M. P., of Winnipeg, had an interview last night with the Minister of the Interior, with reference to the lease of sites for miners' cottages at a coal mine near Banff Springs. Mr. White gave a favorable reply, and the miners will accordingly bring on their families from Pennsylvania. The company will shortly forward trial shipments of coal to Victoria and San Francisco. The annual meeting of the company will be held in Winnipeg on August 10th, and will be attended by Mayor Stewart and Mr. Scarth, who will leave here together on the 6th prox.

An Old Officer Dismissed.

THREE RIVERS, Que., July 21.—Mr. James Adair, who for 25 years was turnkey at the Three Rivers gaol, has been discharged by the Mercier Government, no cause being assigned. The gentleman who replaces Mr. Adair was in Chicago and was telegraphed for to come and take the place that had been promised him some time ago. Mr. Chevallier, the new gaol officer, is an old Trifluvian, who cannot speak the English language. He is a Liberal in politics.

Caught in a Bush Fire.

KINGSTON, July 21.—A bush fire caused much damage at Wilmur, and it is still burning. James Keown, while driving through the woods, was caught. He unhitched the horses, but before he could get them out one horse was burned to death. Keown escaped, though getting a bad scorching.

OUR FARMERS MAY LEARN.

THE Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune gives the following information:—

"Nelson L. Derby and W. M. Holbrook, of Pembina County, Dakota, who recently made a complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission against the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad Company, in respect to which a hearing has been ordered, have sent to the Commission a long document, argumentative in form, to be considered as evidence at the hearing. Its purport is that the road refused cars upon various texts for the timely transportation of Dakota wheat. The true reason for the refusal, it is averred, will be found to bear some connection with the recent wheat speculation in Chicago, the country wheat being kept back until its delivery could be made serviceable to the speculators, which course of procedure proved ruinous to the farmers."

This experience of our neighbours throws light upon several questions of much interest at present to Canadians. In Dakota, that chosen land of free trade in railways, where every man may build his own line, it seems that the farmer is far more at the mercy of the railway than in Canada, where we do not find wheat refused carriage till some gamblers in league with the road have rigged the market to suit themselves.

Then, apart from the railway question, there is that of the gambling in wheat, a procedure, which we are told, "proved ruinous to the farmers." Well, it might do so, when, after the gamblers get through their game, the market is utterly demoralized, as it is at present, No. 2 spring wheat in Chicago being worth 10 cents a bushel less than it is here. And sometimes the mischief extends to the following crop, for the locking up of wheat by the corner has more than once kept it from the market, added to the surplus store, and affected prices injuriously.

Our farmers might do well to reflect before they hasten to form a commercial partnership with a country where railways and grain dealers play such tricks at the expense of the agriculturalists.

THE FACTS OF THE CASE.

IN uttering a tissue of abuse against Mr. John A. Macdonnell because he has been made a County Judge, the Ottawa Free Press says:—

"A little later on Mr. Macdonnell brought some complaint against Hon. S. H. Blake before the Law Society of Toronto, but his allegations were promptly dismissed as unfounded."

The Free Press has been misinformed, Mr. S. H. Blake was loudly accused by a legal brother in Peterborough of unprofessional conduct and gross dishonesty. Before the Benchers, however, this lawyer refused to give evidence as to the truth of his own charges, thus leaving to the public the alternative of supposing that he had grossly slandered Mr. Blake in Peterborough, or if he had spoken truly here that he made himself an accomplice in Mr. Blake's dishonesty by protecting him from the consequences of his offence by refusing to tell the truth before the Benchers. The result, if not the object of this change of base, was that through this unscrupulous political partisanship Mr. Blake escaped from being disciplined by the heads of his honourable profession while Mr. Macdonnell was exposed to the unfounded attack of such journals as the Ottawa Free Press. Knowing the facts, we do not intend to allow Judge Macdonnell to be thus slandered and unfairly abused without making a protest. If the Free Press wishes to obtain authoritative corroboration of this true version of the matter it has only to apply to the Police Magistrate of Peterborough.

THE Kingston Whig is at us again about the coal duties. We cannot hope to persuade the Whig because it will trust to its imaginative theories instead of looking at the prices in the two countries. The price of coal has not been raised 75 cts. in the States, which would be necessary, according to the Whig's theory, to counterbalance the 25 cent raise in Canada and the 50 cent duty. It is not the fact, as experience proves, that bituminous coal and coke made from it) cannot be made a substitute for anthracite.

THE Brockville Recorder, which has the habit of neglecting to verify its statements, says that many Conservative farmers are pronouncing in favour of Commercial Union, and then it gives a list of names without one farmer among them, their avocations being those of lawyer, produce dealer and accountant. It is the same with the political wire pullers who lead these dupes by means of false statements.

For Bronchitis and Asthma, try Allen's Lung Balsam; the best cough perscription known.

A QUESTION OF MORALITY.

Mr. McGlynn says he declines to take his politics from Rome; but confiscation is a question of morality confiscation is immoral, and politics can sanction only what is moral and allowable.—Monetary Times.

THE MARKET REPORTS.

The only new feature in the wheat trade is the unusually large deliveries at primary points. The market has held its own, however, on large seaboard clearances and disturbing crop news. The seaboard clearances are very heavy, the total for the last eight weeks being over 19,500,000, as compared with 12,000,000 for the same period last year. The demand will keep up for several weeks yet, as European grain will not be ready for the market before September 1st. It thus appears that a further decrease in the visible supply may be counted on this year while last year large additions were continuously made to it commencing at the middle of July. Added to this the estimate of a decrease in the crop of the United States of 40,000,000 for this year as compared with last year should establish firmness.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc.

"We will meet them so," he said. "They shall see that we are not afraid of them. Don't be frightened, dear, they will not dare to harm us; they will be afraid of the consequences of harming English people."

The words were scarcely out of his mouth when the cavalcade began to appear in front of the window, led, as Jantje had said, by Frank Muller on his black horse, accompanied by Hans Coetzee on the fat pony and the villainous looking Hendrik mounted on a nondescript sort of animal, and carrying a gun and an assegai in his hand. Behind these were a body of about fifteen or sixteen armed men, among whom Silas Croft recognized most of his neighbors, by whose side he had lived for years in peace and amity.

Opposite the house they stopped and began looking about. They could not see into the room at once on account of the bright light outside and the shadow within.

"I fancy you will find the birds flown, nephew," said the fat voice of Hans Coetzee. "They have got warning of your little visit."

"They cannot be far," answered Muller. "I have had them watched, and know that they have not left the place. Get down, uncle, and look in the house, and you too, Hendrik."

The Kaffir obeyed with alacrity, tumbling out of his saddle with all the grace of a sack of coals, but the Boer hesitated.

"Uncle Silas is an angry man," he ventured; "he might shoot if he found me poking about his house."

"Don't answer me!" thundered Muller; "get down and do as I bid you!"

"Ah, what a devil of a man!" murmured the unfortunate Hans as he hurried to obey.

Meanwhile Hendrik the one eyed had jumped upon the veranda and was peering through the windows.

"Here they are, baas, here they are!" he sang out; "the old cock and the pullet, too!" and he gave a kick to the window, which, being unlatched, swung wide open, revealing the old man sitting there in his wooden armchair with Bessie standing at his side, his rifle on his knees, and holding his fair haired niece by the hand. Frank Muller dismounted and came on to the veranda, and behind him crowded up a dozen or more of his followers.

"What is it that you want, Frank Muller, that you come to my house with all these armed men?" asked Silas Croft from his chair.

"I call upon you, Silas Croft, to surrender to take your trial as a land betrayer and a rebel against the republic," was the answer. "I am sorry," he added, with a bow toward Bessie, on whom his eyes had been fixed all the time, "to be obliged to take you prisoner in the presence of a lady, but my duty gives me no choice."

"I do not know what you mean," said the old man. "I am a subject of Queen Victoria and an Englishman. How then, can I rebel against any republic? I am an Englishman, I say," he went on with rising anger, speaking so high that his powerful voice rang until every Boer there could hear it, "and I acknowledge the authority of no republics. This is my house, and I order you to leave it. I claim my rights as an Englishman"——

"Here," interrupted Muller, coldly, "Englishmen have no rights, except such as we choose to allow them."

"Shoot him!" cried a voice.

"Treat him as Buskes treated Van der Linden at Potchefstroom!" cried another.

"Yes, make him swallow the same pill that we gave to Dr. Barber," put in a third.

"Silas Croft, are you going to surrender," asked Muller, in the same cold voice.

"No!" thundered the old man in his English ide. "I surrender to no rebels in arms gainst the queen. I will shoot the first man who tries to lay a finger on me!" and he rose to his feet and lifted his rifle.

"Shall I shoot him, baas?—shall I shoot him?" asked the one eyed Hendrik, smacking his lips at the thought, and fiddling with the rusty lock of the old fowling piece he carried.

Muller, by way of answer, struck him across the face with the back of his hand. "Hans Coetzee," he said, "go and arrest that man."

Poor Hans hesitated, as well he might. Nature had not endowed him with any great amount of natural courage, and the sight of his old neighbor's rifle barrel made him feel positively sick. He hesitated and began to stammer excuses.

"Are you going, uncle, or must I denounce you to the general as a sympathizer with Englishmen?" asked Muller, in malice, for he knew the old fellow's weaknesses and cowardice, and was playing on them.

"I am going. Of course I am going, nephew. Excuse me; a little faintness took me—the heat of the sun," he babbled. "Oh, yes, I am going to seize the rebel. Perhaps one of those young men would not mind engaging his attention on the other side. He is an angry man—I know him of old—and an angry man with a gun, you know, dear nephew"——

"Are you going?" said his terrible master once more.

"Oh, yes! certainly yes. Dear Uncle Silas, pray put down that gun, it is so dangerous. Don't stand there looking like a wild ox, but come up to the yoke. You are old, Uncle Silas, and I don't want to have to hurt you. Come now, come, come," and he held out his hand toward him as though he were a shy horse that he was endeavuring to beguile.

"Hans Coetzee, traitor and liar that you are," said the old man, "if you come a step nearer, by God! I will put a bullet through you!"

"Go on, Hans; chuck a reim over his head; get him by the tail; knock him down with a yokeskei; turn the old bull on his back!" shouted the crowd of scoffers from the window, taking very good care, however, to clear off to the right and left in order to leave room for the expected bullet.

Hans positively burst into tears, and Muller, who was the only one who held his ground, caught him by the arm, and, putting out all his strength, swung him toward Silas Croft.

For reasons of his own he was anxious that the latter should shoot one of them, and he chose Hans Coetzee, whom he disliked and despised, for the sacrifice.

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN.

Lesson IV of the International Series (Third Quarter), for Sunday, July 24. Text of the Lesson, Matt. cxi, 13-17. Golden Text, Matt. cxi, 17.

We here pass from the ministry of John to that of Jesus. The transition hour is the baptism of the Lord by John; that was the most important act in the harbinger's mission. The king was thus inaugurated, and the work of the forerunner was nearing its end. The scene is profoundly instructive. The sinless One submits to the symbolical act as if he were a sinner.

THE LESSON.

V. 13. Then Cometh:—We cannot be quite certain how long John the Baptist had been preaching up to this period. Perhaps, taking into account the comparative age of the Baptist, we may suppose that the baptism of Christ took place six months after John began his ministry. Tradition, which has selected the spot, has also named the winter as the time of the baptism. Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee. Mark i, 9 names the town. We have already seen that this town was about seventy miles north of Jerusalem, and perhaps about the same distance from the place of baptism. That spot would seem to be the same as where, in verses five and six, multitudes came to John for baptism. Probably this was the place already signalized in the history of redemption. Here the Israelites under Joshua crossed the river; here the waters showed the power of God when they were miraculously opened by Elijah and Elisha. No wonder that multitudes still come, as many travelers inform us, and plunge into the waters at this sacred spot.

V. 14. John's Hesitancy.—John knew something of Christ's miraculous birth, blameless life and divine character. No wonder that he shrank from performing this service. More dating it seemed that Jesus should baptize him. He felt unworthy to unloose his Lord's sandals, far less to baptize him. This hesitancy is in perfect harmony with other examples of John's marked humility. The imperfect tense here employed shows that it was not a momentary act when he forbade him. The word means that he tried to hinder him. As Alford suggests, the word implies active and earnest preventing with gestures of hand and tones of the voice. When Jesus spoke the words which removed John's doubt he immediately obeyed. We have three accounts of the baptism, but Matthew alone tells us of John's hesitancy to perform the significant act. John already regarded him as the Messiah, but he wanted and he now received perfect assurance regarding his divine anointing. Why should Christ, the sinless one, submit to the baptism of repentance? The answer is not far to seek. He was made sin for us. Being in the likeness of sinful flesh, it was fitting that he should submit to the rite intended for sinners. In this spirit he performed many other acts, such as keeping the Passover, an observance belonging especially to sinners. His baptism thus identified the Lord with those whom he came to redeem.

V. 15. Our Lord's significant answer removed John's hesitancy. The reply also shows Christ's design in submitting to the ordinance. Had Christ left this act unperformed, something would have been wanting in that perfect righteousness which he came to manifest. He came in our nature not only to die the death of atonement, but to live a life of perfect obedience. Baptism is an act of obedience. Standing in our place it was fitting that Jesus should submit to this ordinance. What Christ sanctioned now by his own example he afterward commanded, making it binding upon all his true disciples. The baptism also was an inauguration of Christ's public and official life. The "now" suggests that the relation of subjection was real, but was only temporary and would soon give place to a truer relationship. Christ recognizes some ground for John's doubt, but John was to acquiesce for good, though temporary reasons. The act is that of Jesus as well as that of John.

V. 16. Went Up Straightway Out of the Water.—After the act was performed the heavens were opened, the clouds were parted, and the spirit as a dove descended.

As a Dove.—This may be understood of the shape which was assumed, or of the manner of descent, so far as these words are concerned; but adding what Luke has said (Luke iii, 22), it is more probable that the reference is rather to the form which the spirit chose to assume. To limit this expression to the manner of the descent is to do violence to the natural meaning of the expression. Nothing could be more appropriate to the character, life and work of Jesus than this dove like form. John tells us (John i, 32) that "it abode on him." It was a permanent possession; thus he received the spirit without measure; thus he was formally anointed for his great work; thus he officially entered upon it. Then John and others knew, by testimony from heaven, that he was the Messiah.

V. 17. A Voice from Heaven.—The voice of the eternal God was now heard. This voice would confirm John most fully and better prepare him for his further relations to Jesus. It is possible that the voice was heard only by him and by Christ himself. The term Son was applied to the Messiah in Psalms ii, 7, 12. On two other occasions the voice of the Father was heard—at the transfiguration and shortly before the crucifixion. A comparison of the records of these three events by all the evangelists will show that on every occasion Christ was engaged in prayer. The three occasions abound in suggestive lessons.

My Son, My Beloved.—This is a sort of proper name; it is a distinctive title. The remaining words are from the Messianic prophecy as found in Isaiah xlii, 1. This was a wonderful moment for the Son of man. Now as never before up to this hour his great mission was opening to his gaze. All the persons of the blessed Trinity were audibly or visibly present: the Father by an audible voice, the Son in human form, and the Spirit as a dove. The ordinance thus honored by the triune God should be honored by all true believers.

POINTS TO BE REMEMBERED.

1. It becomes us to follow Christ's example and to obey all Christ's commands. We may not understand the full significance of some of them any more than did John, but it is always right to fulfill all righteousness.

2. Christ's obedience in life as well as his atoning sacrifice was necessary to the completion of his work, and brought a great reward. Every act of obedience on our part also may be followed by a still, small voice saying to each true Christian, Thou art my son; thou art my daughter, in whom I am well pleased.

3. All the persons of the Trinity are deeply interested in, and have their part to perform in, the salvation of sinners. In the conversation of Christ with Nicodemus, the part which each person in the blessed Trinity performs is fully illustrated.—Sunday School World.

"Shortness of breath

is inscribed on a tombstone in an English grave-yard. In all probability it would never have been necessary, if only the poor unfortunate victim of some disease of the respiratory organs had known of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a panacea for all diseases of the throat and lungs. For consumption it is believed to be the only real specific yet known. For all scrofulous and blood diseases it is unfailing.

WHAT IS THREATENED.

If there was no tariff Yankee manufacturers would undersell Canadian manufacturers until they were driven to the wall and forced to stop work, when they would quickly combine and elevate prices much higher than they are now, and Canadian farmers would have to pay them, too.—Canadian Manufacturer.

THE MEREST RUBBISH.

The prospect Mr. Wiman held out to his hearers at Drayton and Port Hope appears to be based on an assumed state of things in this Dominion generally not in accordance with facts; while his idle chit-chat about Canada doing nothing else but producing chickens for the United States market, is the merest rubbish.—Newmarket Era (Reform).

EARNS HIS DEGREE.

The Peterborough REVIEW is astonished at the falsification of figures indulged in by Commercial Union advocates, and proceeds to show that in an address at Lindsay editor Thomas Shaw handled trade statistics in the most reckless manner. He is doctoring figures to such an extent these days as to earn the title of "Dr. Shaw."—Kingston News.

HOW HE WORKS THE WIRES.

Mr. Wiman, through his telegraph company, let Americans know of a successful meeting held at Drayton, Ont. But he kept his friends on this side ignorant of the fact that on the 28th of June the Dundas county farmers' institute pronounced against commercial union—at least his telegraph company failed to enlighten the public as to the result of the Dundas meeting. Why?—Chicago Canadian American.

In Brief.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order. Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Building.

Mr. W. J. Hall is preparing to build two more handsome brick residences on Brock street, similar in design to the two already built. The site on the corner of Brock and Aylmer streets is being raised several feet, so as to be nearly on a level with the foundations of the others. Mr. Hall has done a good deal to ornament this part of the street and is deserving of a better sidewalk in front of his property than that which is there. A new sidewalk should be put down and raised considerably higher than the present one, so as to suit the increased height of the property.

Court of Revision.

Judge Weller presided at a session of the Court of Revision held on Thursday evening. The cases of Elias Burnham and Robert Meharry, on the application of Mr. C. W. Sawers, were enlared until July 29th Mrs. Robinson's appeal was dismissed. Mr. E. A. Peck appeared for Mrs. Robinson. Mr. Henry Best's appeal was also dismissed. The Water Works Company's appeal was not taken up on account of Judge Weller being a stock holder in the company. A local solicitor will dispose of the case at a future session of the court. Mr. Roger appeared for the Water Company.

REMNANTS of Prints and Muslins must all be cleared out this week at Turnbull's. For Genuine Bargains call at TURNBULL'S.

Picnic.

The Baptist Church Sunday School picnic was held on Thursday at Savigney's Point down the Otonabee. At half past twelve o'clock p. m., the Golden Eye left the Wolfe street wharf carrying about four hundred people. At the locks a scow was taken on and the excursion party sailed merrily on through beautiful scenery. When about four miles down it began to rain and the down-pour continued till the point was reached. Here dinner was served on the scow. Soon after dinner it cleared up and the afternoon was spent in the enjoyment of sports of various kinds. The boat returned at about 6 o'clock in the evening.

A GREAT CRICKET MATCH.

The Belmonts of Philadelphia and the Peterboroughs.

A cricket match that aroused considerable interest was played on the Amateur Athletic Association grounds on Thursday afternoon between the Belmonts, of Philadelphia, and the Peterboroughs. The Belmont team, known as champions of the United States, are making a trip through Canada and had very easily defeated the teams they had met. The Peterboroughs were strongly represented, their best available men being put on the field, but despite this they were far behind in the score.

The interest felt in the match was not so much on account of an expectation that the contest would be close or exciting, as on account of the certainty that good cricket would be played. The playing was certainly splendid. The visitors are all good cricketers. The team included several good bowlers besides Pacey the professional, their batting was good and their fielding close and sharp. While in the field every man was on the alert; each took promptly the station assigned him by the captain and fielded like a professional base ball player.

With the sharp fielding it was difficult for the Peterboroughs to make runs and the score put up was secured by careful and patient play. It was when the hardest hitters were tempted to hit out that they were pretty sure to suffer, although several "threes" were counted on balls that were driven to the fence.

Peterborough took hold of the bat first. Rogers, Miles Hamilton and Rutherford were the only ones who made double figures, and they played well for them. The bowling of W. Scott and Pacey was difficult to score on, one with the slow and the other with the faster balls and peculiar breaks. The side retired with a score of 52.

The belmonts made a score of 173. The principal scores—the scores that ran up the large total—were made by Smith, 58, and Coates, 46. Machin succeeded in scoring 24 runs, but the other scores were not large, the bowling of the home team being good especially that of Max. Hamilton and Logan. The score, large as it was, was probably not so large as the visitors expected it would be. But for the good fielding which supported the home bowlers the figures would have been higher.

In their second innings the Peterboroughs did much better—they approached nearer to what they should have done, considering the strength of the team, all day. S. Ray played carefully for 24, going out at last by a catch. Stratton used care and patience, and held his wicket for some time, adding 11 to the score. Bell scored 10, and Rutherford another 11, some of them being hard hits. When time was called, at six o'clock, the team had scored 67 in this innings for five wickets. Each of the five players was caught out, and Stratton was still playing carefully, assisted at the opposite end by Thomas, when play ceased. The heavy rain in the afternoon had interfered with the match and the time thus lost shortened the game.

FRANCE AND RUSSIA.

An Alliance Said to Have Been Completed Between the Two Powers.

LONDON, July 22.—The Pall Mall Gazette printed a sensational and, in some respects, alarmist editorial yesterday afternoon, beginning with the caution "What does this mean?" and straightway going on to tell what the man in the Gazette office thinks it means. "The attitude of France in regard to Egypt," the article says, "is extremely menacing. Hitherto the claims of the French Government, while they have been extravagant and unwarranted, have been models of modest requirement compared with those she now puts forth, and the basis of her excess of arrogance is easily discernible. In insisting upon equal rights in Egypt with England, France plainly shows that she is being egged on by Russia, and the suspicion recently aroused that those two countries are pursuing a preconcerted European policy is confirmed. Latterly France has followed the lead of Russia in every important European movement. Her prompt notification to the Sultan that she would refuse to recognize the election of Ferdinand as Prince of Bulgaria on precisely the same grounds that Russia takes for withholding her approval, the invalidity of the acts of the present Sobranje, can have had no other incentive than the influence of Russia, since France has at no time prior to this evinced any concern in the genuineness of the Bulgarian assembly as a representative body of questioned the validity of its proceedings. The sudden settlement of the Afghan frontier question after two years of wrangling and the almost passive acceptance of much less in the way of territorial advantage than she has all along insisted upon are regarded as very suspicious, and the natural inference is that the Czar's government, having completed its alliance with France, is anxious to get the Afghan matter out of the way that it may not hamper Russia's operations in the Balkans."

STANLEY'S REPORTED DEATH.

Theories Advanced to Account for the Discredited Report.

LONDON, July 22.—The report of the death of Henry M. Stanley created an enormous sensation here. All of the newspapers accompanied the despatches announcing the event with voluminous obituary notices and sketches of his expeditions. His rescue of Doctor Livingstone is dilated upon with great precision in detail, and the eminent services of the explorer are recounted at length and in laudatory language. In spite of these elaborate tributes to the famous traveller and author, however, the reports of his death are discredited by the papers publishing them, and even the West African Telegraph Company, through whose agency the news was brought, is unable to verify the statements. A variety of theories are advanced to account for the reports, but none of them have even as plausible a foundation as the rumor itself. The one most generally accepted, however, is that the native who brought the news to Matadi reported that a "white chief" had been killed, and that the missionary who forwarded the rumor assumed that the "white chief" was Mr. Stanley.

A Priest's Sad Death.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 22.—The death of Father Dumas, parish priest, of St. Eloi, is reported from Campbellton under peculiarly sad circumstances. He was out fishing with Father Lavelle and three others. While running through a series of rapids in the Nouvelle river their canoe upset, and the whole party was precipitated in the water. Father Dumas, unable to swim, was being assisted ashore by one of the party, when near the bank of the river the man found himself sinking and to save himself shook of the priest, who sank in shallow water. A rescue party at once brought him ashore, but hemorrhage of the stomach set in and within three hours the priest had bled to death.

Duty on Sawed Elm Lumber.

WASHINHTON, July 21.—The Treasury Department has decided that sawed elm boards 6½ feet in length, 1¼ inches in thickness, the edges of which follow the natural shape of the tree, used in the manufacture of hoops, are dutiable at the rate of $1 per thousand feet board measure under the tariff provision for sawed elm lumber.

THE OKA INDIANS.

The Trouble Between them and the Seminary of St. Sulpice.

MONTREAL, July 22.—The difficulty between the Seminary of St. Sulpice and the Oka Indians regarding the rights of the latter is creating a great deal of interest in religious circles in this city. It will be remembered that a few weeks ago an appeal was issued by the Protestant Minister, Rev. Mr. Maudsley, and Chief Timothee asking the assistance of white people in their efforts to obtain a church edifice in which to worship God according to the Protestant faith. A few days afterwards Mr. Maudsley and the Indians were served with a protest warning them against building on the reserve, as the Seminary claimed the exclusive ownership of the land, and threatened to take legal proceedings if an attempt to construct a Protestant church was persisted in.

Since the serving of the protest upon the missionary, Rev. Dr. Shaw, President of the Methodist Conference, and other influential friends of the Indians in this city have been in consulation as to the best measures to adopt in the interests of the Indians. Conferences have been held with the seminary authorities and a number of propositions have been agreed upon and submitted to the Indians for their consideration. The seminary offers as compensation $10 an acre for their improved land, which the Indians say is worth at least $30 or $40 an acre, and they do not seem prepared to accept the propositions as they now stand. The Indian Council has held several meetings to consider the matter, but as yet no decision has been arrived at.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE.

The Tanner-Long Episode Disposed of—The Land Bill.

LONDON, July 22.—In the House of Commons last night, after Mr. Smith had spoken, Mr. Gladstone arose. He contended that Dr. Tanner's apology should suffice. Mr. Smith had introduced an ill-advised element into the discussion by suggesting that Dr. Tanner [illegible] to Mr. Long. Did not Mr. Long, in like manner, impute a falsehood to Dr. Tanner? Was an imputation upon an Irish member one thing and an imputation upon an English member another?

The Speaker here intervened, and told the House that Dr. Tanner's apology should be held to cover the offence of which he was accused.

Mr. Smith thereupon withdrew his motion and the incident ended.

THE LAND BILL.

On motion to go into committee on the Land Bill in the House, Mr. R. B. Haldane, Liberal, after a short discussion, withdrew his motion asking that provision be made to reduce family charges on Irish Land, the Government promising an enquiry into the subject.

Mr. Illingworth, member for West Bradford, a Liberal, moved the adjournment of the debate. He appealed to the Government to make a distinct and definite statement regarding the proposed modifications of the bill.

Mr. Smith said that the motion to adjourn itself prevented a statement of the main charges, which Mr. Balfour would have otherwise made The Government would be prepared to put the amendments on the paper to-morrow and to proceed with the bill on Monday. If the Opposition intended to delay or frustrate the passage of the bill, on them would rest the responsibility.

Mr. Balfour said the Government would make a statement of the proposed amendments.

Messrs. O'Connor and Labouchere having spoken, Mr. Illingworth withdrew his motion and Mr. Balfour, rising amid cheers from the Opposition, said that the only important amendments the Government proposed related to what has been called the "back door," given to landlords for eviction, and to the question of the abatement of rents. With regard to the first amendment, it had been framed to prevent a creditor from proceeding, not against the ordinary assest of a debor, but against the tenant's right. (Cheers.) With regard to the second, Mr. Balfour said the Government was unable to accept any such proposal as Mr. Morley's amendment, which seems to be meant to throw all judicial leases into the melting pot and bring out brand new ones, revised on the present scale of prices. The Government adhered to the idea that the judicial rents ought not to be revised, but recognized the fact that the House had undertaken to manage land contracts in Ireland and make the landlords good by act of Parliament, and recognizing also the revolution in prices they proposed to do what the English landlords would do in a similar case. They would adopt, in a rough way, the Cowper commision plan on a sliding scale, which would produce the necessary abatements for the next three years until the purchase act was in force. It was consequently proposed that the Land Court be instructed to devise a scale of remission based solely on the varying prices in different districts. (Cheers.)

Mr. Parnell admitted that the bill, as altered, would do much toward relieving the Irish tenants, and he therefore heartily welcomed it; but he hoped the Government would go a step further and endeavour to mitigate the hardships resulting from their delay in dealing with the question He urged that the judicial decisions of the commissions should effect the present year's rent.

After further remarks by Messrs. Goschen, Dillon and Russell, the House then entered into committee pro forma.

Committed for Trial.

HAMILTON, July 22.—James O'Neil, who has been in jail since last Sunday pending the result of the coroner's inquest on the death of William McLaren, was committed for trial this morning by Coroner Biggar on the charge of manslaughter. The jury decided that the deceased was killed by O'Neil. Under the section of the statue by which the prisoner was committed it will not be necessary for him to appear before the Police Magistrate.

THE BOULANGER BOOM DEAD.

PARIS, July 22.—The Boulanger party no longer exists. For eighteen month Gen. Boulanger undoubtedly personified the patriotic side of French feeling; but his popularity has come down by a run. France wants no warlike spectre, no military idol, no Cæsar. On this all Frenchmen, whether Royalists, Imperialists, Republicans, or Radicals, are firmly resolved. General Boulanger is merely a gallant officer who has been absurdly puffed by injudicious friends.

RUSSIAN OCCUPATION OF KERKI.

LONDON, July 22.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times denies that disorders exist in Kerki. Russian occupation has benefited the inhabitants, who appreciate Russia's work in maintaining order and protecting trade, Russia notified England a month beforehand that she intended to occupy Kerki.

LAND BILL AMENDMENTS.

LONDON, July 22.—Already 236 amendments have been offered to the Land Bill. Mr. Balfour will go to Dublin to-day to confer with the magistracy on the working of a Crimes act. It is expected that the Government will refer the question of family charges and mortgages in Ireland to a select committee at the beginning of the next session.

HARD ON HIM.

LONDON, July 22.—According to a despatch from Pesth, M. Tontchoff, President of the Sobranje, has publicly declared that Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg has grossly deceived the Bulgarians, and that he has been an instrument in the hands of Russia.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 22.—The Turkish commissioner in Crete has proclaimed the concessions the Porte has decided to make to the Cretans. One half the customs revenue is ceded to the Cretans. The resolutions of the Cretan assembly are to be sanctioned by the Porte within three months after they are passed, and the Christians to have an enlarged share in the Local Government.

LONDON, July 22.—The Standard, this morning, says that the Emperor William of Germany, and Francis Joseph of Austria will meet at Gastein on August 7th.

THE BOUNTY SYSTEM.

LONDON, July 22.—The Marquis of Salisbury, replying to a deputation which called to urge the Government to take some action to protect British trade from the effects of foreign competition, assisted by bounties, said it was impossible to speak too strongly of the injustice which foreign bounty systems inflicted on British workmen. A European conference would consider the matter, and in the meantime he could only say that there were two ways for Englishmen to deal with their assailants in this contest. If reasoning failed Englishmen might return the blow.

MR. SMITH SURPRISED.

LONDON, July 22.—W. H. Smith, Government leader in the House of Commons, was asked this afternoon by Mr. Ellis if there was any truth in the wide-spread report that the Queen had sent for Lord Hartington to induce him to join the Ministry. Mr. Smith replied that he had only now heard the statement for the first time and could only say that it caused him great surprise.

LORD RANDOLPH CHURCHILL.

Alleged to Have Solicited the Nationalist Party for an Irish Seat.

LONDON, July 22.—The statement made by Mr. Justin McCarthy at the Parnell dinner on Wednesday evening, that Lord Randolph Churchill had once importuned the Nationalist party to make him a Parliamentary candidate for an Irish seat in the House of Commons on an extreme home rule platform, has done his lordship no good, if it has not indeed, worked him harm, and already his friends are calling upon him to deny it. That, however, it is claimed, would be a difficult matter for him to undertake, since it is alleged that certain correspondence on the subject which passed between Lord Randolph Churchill and the gentleman who acted as go-between at that time is still in existence and will be forthcoming in the event of any display of indignant repudation on the part of the erstwhile Conservative leader.

Failures in Business.

NEW YORK, July 22.—The business failures occurring throughout the country during the last seven days as reported to Dun, Wiman & Co. to-day, by telegraph, number for the United States 147, and for Canada 25, or a total of 172, as compared with a total of 179 last week and 154 the week previous to the last. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were: United States 163, Canada 20; total, 183.

The Arden Drowning.

KINGSTON, July 22.—Later particulars are to hand of the sad drowning accident at Arden. The Mills family with Mrs. Harper, of the United States, who was visiting her brother, W. B. Mills, postmaster of Arden, went to Clear Lake on a picnic. The younger children, with a servant, were out boating when Mrs. Mills, her two daughters and Mrs. Harper went in bathing. Blanche Mills slipped on a rock, the others tried to save her, but the three rescuers were drowned and Blanche reached the shore. It was some time before the sad affair became known, and when the villagers arrived they found Blanche holding her aunt's head out of the water which was not deep. The sad affair has created much sympathy for the bereaved family.

St. Clare River Tunnel.

DETROIT, July 22.—It is now announced that the St. Clare River tunnel at Port Huron will be pushed to completion as fast as possible. Preparations for work on the Canadian side are now about completed and Mr. Murphy, the manager, expects next week to put into the drift the full force of twelve men an each watch. On the Port Huron side a boiler is being erected and other necessary preparations made, and as soon as these are completed an equal force of men will be set to work. Some gas is still met with in the drift on the Canadian side, but so far it has been found impossible to dissipate it without serious trouble.

South Renfrew Election.

OTTAWA, July 22.—Information was received here to-day that Mr Duncan McIntyre has telegraphed his acceptance of the Grit nomination for South Renfrew. It is said that there was so much jealousy against the local Grits that the convention was forced to look for an outsider. Sir Richard Cartwright, who was present, urged Mr. Anglin's name, but the proposal fell so heavily on the convention that it was glad to jump at Hon. Peter Mitchell's suggestion to nominate Mr. McIntyre. Mr. Ferguson's friends are confident that he can beat any outside candidate.

An Infamous Affair.

ST. LOUIS, July 22.—The Vandalia train due here last night was was fired into by a number of miscreants near Greenup Cross [illegible] the baggage and express cars and the passenger coaches. Nobody was hit, but there were several narrow escapes. The train was stopped and backed up to the crossing and a short search made, but the miscreants were not found.

Parted with Heavy Collaterals.

NEW YORK, July 22.—The New York Life Insurance and Trust Company was yesterday induced to part with $75,000 on collateral, consisting of 37 shares of the Chemical National Bank, to Marcus P. Woodruff, who abstracted them from the Safe Depost Company's safe, to which he had access as trustee, the shares belonging to his father's estate. Woodruff has recently been drinking hard. Some say he is insane.

A Boom in Tobacco.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 22.—There is a boom in the tobacco market here. Prices have advanced $2.50 per 100 pounds in three days. The rise is due to a short crop on account of reduced acreage and unfavorweather. Buyers for eastern factories are scrambling to fill large orders, and it looks as if figures would go higher.

United Labor Candidates.

NEW YORK, July 22.—At a meeting of the Anti-poverty Society last night, Dr. McGlynn said the United Labor Party would make no compromise with any party, but would nominate a full ticket at each election including a candidate for President and Vice-President of the United States in 1888.

A Fast Sloop.

BOSTON, July 22.—Gen. Paine's new steel sloop Volunteer, on her trial trip last evening completely outsailed the Priscilla and Bedouin in a four-mile brush off Marblehead, and did it in an 18 mile wind. Everybody was amazed by her wonderful speed and seagoing qualities.

Suicide in Brantford.

BRANTFORD, July 22.—James Dodds, a tanner by trade, living on Alfred street, today while, it is supposed, under the influence of liquor, cut his throat from ear to ear with a razor, inflicting a very deep wound. Medical aid was immediately summoned, but no hope of his recovery is entertained.

CANADIAN HORSES.

THE telegraphic report that the horses lately purchased in Canada for the Imperial army prove to be too dear, and that the attempt is to be discontinued, is being seized upon as a text for discourses as to the asserted unfriendliness of the Mother Country, and its unprofitableness as a market for our surplus horseflesh. Till a fuller report arrives these critics cannot safely assume that the complaint was that we ask too much for our horses. It is more probable that the difficulty is that from the scarcity of suitable horses and the small number they could obtain at any one point, the expenses of the officers purchasing were too heavy as compared with the size of the transaction.

The fact is that during the civil war in the United States Canada was almost completely denuded of this class of horses through the insatiable demand that then arose for them. The consequences of this drain are still felt. We are well supplied with good light horses and with good heavy horses, but there is a lack of good general purpose horses of a fair size from which troopers could be obtained. If our enterprising farmers were to import some suitable sires, and were to take to raising horses of this stamp, there would soon be enough to induce the British army authorities to seek troop horses in Canada. And even without having such purchasers our farmers would find it to their advantage to raise stock which would always secure fair prices, and in exceptional cases (always likely to arise) very remunerative figures. It costs no more to feed a good horse than the weeds that are too common for the profit of those who raise them. This telegram should not discourage any farmer who was preparing to improve his horseflesh.

A DIFFERENCE.

THE scheme of Messrs. Butterworth, Wiman and other Republican wire pullers in the United States to agitate, in conjunct with Reform wire pullers in Canada, for for Commercial Annexation, having fallen very flat, the opposition press is now resorting to the device of endeavouring to confound Reciprocity, as under the old treaty, with Commercial Union. They say that because Conservatives are opposed to this disguised annexation they are also opposed to a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty. The falseness of this pretence is shown by the fact that there is a standing offer on our statute books, placed there by the Conservatives, to resume reciprocity as soon as the United States wishes. Then, turning round they say that Conservatives are in favour of Reciprocity and therefore cannot logically oppose Commercial Union. There is this wide difference. By Reciprocity as under the former treaty and by the National Policy Canada makes no attempt to shut out British imports in favour of foreign imports. The Commercial Unionists ask us to adopt a tariff framed purposely to exclude British imports, while freely admitting the rival foreign imports to crush our own manufacturers. There is a wide difference between preferring our own Canadian people to the rest of the world, and preferring foreigners to the people both of the Dominion and the Empire.

PUBLIC SPIRIT.

The Brockville Recorder has the following editorial remarks:—

"Peterborough, though it has nothing like the fire appliances Brockville has, is trying to get into class B. In some correspondence that took place the secretary of the Underwriters Association concluded a letter with an assurance that the association are anxious to meet the demands of towns like Peterborough which are making laudable efforts to improve their fire protection appliances. Why don't they show their desire in the case of Brockville? After all, we cannot blame them so much, when we find that their action is the result of people in the town who misrepresent our position, betraying the trust which has been reposed in them, and throw obstacles in the way of our claims being properly considered. We hope that Peterborough has not such traitors to her interests in her midst."

We are happy to be able to assure the Recorder that its surmise is correct that the people of Peterborough, when the interests of the municipality are concerned, do not misrepresent our position or throw obstacles in the way of our success. We are therefore led to hope that some of our people, in time may broaden the field of their mental vision and learn to show as as much public spirit when the interests of our Dominion are at stake.

THE firmness of our authorities in maintaining our rights last season, with the loyal support of the Empire, seems to have had a very beneficial effect upon the New England fishermen. There are few, if any, attempts to fish within the three mile limit, reported poachers having turned out to be Canadians. Our customs laws are also so much better observed, that while they are still duly enforced this can be combined with some relaxation of the regulations. The Maine and Massachusetts fishermen have apparently learned that the laws of Canada have to be observed within the territorial limits of the Dominion.

BLAINE ABSENT.

It may be, however, that Blaine's European tour has something to do with the rest we are having regarding the fisheries. When he was at Bar Harbour last year there was no other means offered so convenient to keep himself before the public as to stir up the fishermen of Maine into a heat over alleged fishery outrages. This year another plan to rivet public attention on his white plume has been adopted and he has dropped the fisheries as completely as if he did not care pinhook for all the codfish that ever salted the ocean—a theory to which he was once committed. And therefore, mayhap, we have a rest about the fisheries.—Chicago News.

In all probability it would never have been necessary, if only the poor unfortunate victim of some disease of the respiratory organs had known of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a panacea for all diseases of the throat and lungs. For consumption it is believed to be the only real specific yet known. For all scrofulous and blood diseases it is unfailing.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc.

Up went the rifle, and at that moment Bessie, who had been standing bewildered, made a dash at it, knowing that bloodshed could only make matters worse. As she did so it exploded, but not before she had shaken her uncle's arm, for instead of killing Hans, as it undoubtedly would otherwise have done, the bullet only cut his ear and then passed out through the open window place. In an instant the room was filled with smoke. Hans Coetzee clapped his hand to his head, and commenced to yell with pain and terror, and in the confusion that ensued three or four men, headed by the Kaffir Hendrik, rushed into the room and sprang upon Silas Croft, who had retreated to the wall and was standing with his back against it, his rifle, which he had not had time to cock, held above his head.

When his assailants got close to him they hesitated, for, aged and bent as he was, the old man looked like mischief. He stood there like a lion and swung the rifle stock about.

Presently one of the men struck at him and missed him, but before he could retreat Silas brought down the stock of his rifle on his head and down he went like an ox beneath a poleax. Then they closed on him, but for a while he kept them off, knocking down another man in his efforts. As he did so the witch doctor, Hendrik, who had been watching for his opportunity, brought down the barrel of his old fowling piece upon Silas' bald head and felled him. Fortunately the blow was not a very heavy one or it would have caved his skull in. As it was it only cut his head open and knocked him down. Thereon the whole mass of Boers, with the exception of Muller, who was standing watching, seeing that he was now defenseless, fell upon him and would have kicked him to death had not Bessie precipitated herself upon him with a cry and thrown her arms about him to protect him.

Then Frank Muller interfered, fearing lest she should be hurt. Plunging into the fray with a curse, he exercised, his great strength, throwing the men this way and that like ninepins and finally dragging Silas to his feet again.

"Come!" he shouted, "take him out of this;" and accordingly, with taunts and obloquy, the poor old man, whose fringe of white locks was red with blood, was kicked and dragged and pushed on to the veranda, then off it on to the drive, where he fell over the body of the murdered Kaffir boy, and finally hauled up to the open space by the flagstaff, on which the Union Jack, that he had planted there some two months before, still waved bravely in the breeze. Here he sank down upon the grass, his back against the flagstaff, and asked faintly for some water. Bessie, who was weeping bitterly, and whose heart felt as though it were bursting with anguish and indignation, pushed her way through the men, and, running to the house, got some in a glass and brought it to him. One of the brutes tried to knock it out of her hand, but she avoided him and gave it to her uncle, who drank it greedily.

"Thank you, love, thank you," he said; "don't be frightened, I ain't much hurt. Ah! if only John had been here, and we had had an hour's notice, we would have held the place against them all."

Meanwhile one of the Boers, getting on the shoulders of another, had succeeded in untying the cord on which the Union Jack was bent and hauling it down. Then they reversed it and hoisted it half mast high, and began to cheer for the republic.

"Perhaps Uncle Silas does not know that we are a republic again now," said one of the men, a near neighbor of his own, in mockery.

"What do you mean by a republic?" asked the old man. "The Transvaal is a British colony."

There was a hoot of derision at this. "The English government has surrendered," said the same man. "The country is given up, and the British are to evacuate it in six months."

"It is a lie!" said Silas, springing to his feet, "a cowardly lie! Whoever says that the English have given up the country to a few thousand blackguards like you, and deserted its subjects and the loyals and the natives, is a liar—a liar from hell!"

There was another howl of mockery at this outburst, and when it had subsided Frank Muller stepped forward.

"It is no lie, Silas Croft," he said; "and the cowards are not we Boers, who have beaten you again and again, but your soldiers, who have done nothing but run away, and your government, that follows the example of your soldiers. Look here"—and he took a paper out of his pocket—"you know that signature, I suppose; it is one of the triumvirate. Listen to what he says," and he read aloud:

"WELL BELOVED HEER MULLER—This is to inform you that, by the strength of our arms fighting for the right and freedom, and also by the cowardice of the British government, generals and soldiers, we have by the will of the Almighty concluded this day a glorious peace with the enemy. The British government surrenders nearly everything except in the name. The republic is to be re-established, and the soldiers who are left will leave the land within six months. Make this known to every one, and forget not to thank God for our glorious victories."

The Boers shouted aloud, as well they might, and Bessie wrung her hands. As for the old man, he leaned against the flagstaff, and his gory head sank upon his breast as though he were about to faint. Then suddenly he lifted it, and, with clinched and quivering fists held high in the air, broke out into such a torrent of blasphemy and cursing that even the Boers fell back for a moment, dismayed into silence by the force of the fury wrung from his utter humiliation.

It was an appalling sight to see this good and God fearing old man, his face bruised, his gray hairs dabbled with blood and his clothes nearly rent from his body, stamp and reel to and fro, blaspheming his Maker and the day that he was born; hurling execrations at his beloved country and the name of Englishman and the government that had deserted him, till at last nature gave out, and he fell in a fit, there, in the very shadow of his dishonored flag.

OPEN LETTER NO. 2 TO MR. CLUXTON.

DEAR SIR,—It is a matter of extreme regret to me that you have concluded not to answer the questions which I have placed before you regarding Commercial Union, the reason assigned being because I have not signed my name, but have addressed you under the affix "Juno."

I am astonished at this conclusion, because it seems to me that an ardent advocate of Commercial Union, such as you are, would have accepted any and every opportunity to place before what is, in the opinion of Commercial Unionists, a suffering people, the panacea for their woes. However, as I have no desire to appear in print, being of rather a modest disposition, and having only asked you the questions in sincerity to obtain information, and as you have declined to answer them, I am satisfied to endeavour to work out the answers myself.

But, sir, there is an apparent inconsistency in your letter. You decline to answer the questions because of the reason [illegible] immediately proceed to answer one. I am compelled to take exception to the way in which you put your answer, because it is very misleading. You remark that "I lay down the following proposition and say:—'As a matter of fact, the United States produces the same things as we produce, not only sufficient for their home use, but a surplus for exporting.'" And, then, sir, you ask me the question, "Is this true?" and you proceed to give a list of items and their value that the United States has imported from us. I do not charge you with wilfully trying to mislead me. But, sir, it must be quite apparent to you that if I did not know better, the conclusion that I would have to come to would be that the reason the United States imports so much from us is because she has not a surplus, but a deficiency. No, no, Mr. Cluxton, the proposition I lay down you know is a correct one. You can not deny it. But, however, as you say, "Let us see."

Let us take wheat.

During the year 1884-85 the United States produced 512,763,900 bushels, and out of this amount they exported 84,653,714 bushels besides 10,648,145 barrels of flour, or in other words home consumption per capita was 6.59 per cent., exported 25.84.

Another item you mention is cattle. Why, sir, during the same years 1884-85 the United States exported 178,675,905 lbs. of beef. Then as to butter; this is the article the New Yorkers are so very short of, that they would pay us 80 cents per pound for it, so Mr. Wiman says. Why, they exported during the same years 19,599,872 lbs, and yet forsooth you tell us that the markets of the nation that has such a surplus for exporting is the market par excellence for our farmers, I think, Sir, you will not find our farmers as simple as Commercial Unionists imagine them to be.

Another very important point you have neglected in giving figures to show the total value of the United States importations from us, is that you should give the total value entered for home consumption, and not the total entered at the different Custom Houses, because you must be aware of the fact that there is a large quantity of grains and a large number of cattle, etc., that go through in bond destined for the Mother Country. I might quote you other figures, in fact figures on every item you mention, excepting barley and eggs. But I think I have given sufficient to prove that the proposition I lay down is a correct one, viz. that the United States produce the same things as we do, and have a surplus for exportation.

Now sir, one more remark and I have done, with this question until my first letter is answered and that is as to your reference to the egg trade. You say eggs are admitted free of duty into the United States. This accounts for the impetus given to this great trade." Why are eggs admitted into a country so highly protected as the United States? We are told that they must have our barley, and yet there is a duty on it. Does it not seem strange to you that if they must have our barley they should place a duty upon it and yet admit eggs free. I am of the opinion that if the United States could do without our eggs you would find a duty upon them as well as on barley. The inferences you may draw from this are: 1st. They can do without our barley. 2nd. They want our eggs, and hence there is no duty. 3rd. If the United States are so anxious for the products of our farms, and mines and forests, all they have to do is to admit them free, like our eggs. The fact of the matter is the Yankee is so cute that he does not want to do this, but "Yankee"-like he will very willingly enter into partnership if you will permit him to be senior partner, owning three parts of the business. What I mean is this, the United States don't care a straw about Canadian competition in the markets as they have nothing to lose, while they have everything to gain in having access to our markets for their manufacturers. This must be a fact, for Commercial Unionists tell us they will ruin our manufacturers. Then they can save a million or two by having our fisheries. Why, Mr. Cluxton, are you aware of the fact that the United States has at this moment, a surplus in cash of $100,000,000 that they don't know what to do with. Hence they have, it appears to me, concluded to buy a very rich plum in the shape of the markets of Canada, for their manufacturers. So you see that after all our American cousins are not so generous; they have no use for more money, hence they are willing to destroy custom houses for five years. Well we want money, and if we destroy our custom houses for five years where will we get it from?

I am very respectfully,
JUNO.

Peterborough, July 18th. 1887.

THE C. P. R. ROUTE.

"The impediments in the way of the construction of the Euphrates Valley and similar lines are equally obvious, and the accomplishment remains a thing of the dim future. Meanwhile there is a route now ready between Europe. America and Asia possessed of all the essence of the utility the Through Siberian line can boast. The Canadian Pacific route, if it cannot literally claim such celerity as that to which the projected Siberian route pretends, promises to be much more generally serviceable at once in the intermediate stages. From the point of view of national interest, it could set up an indisputable right to be aided in its development, if the establishment of communication by it with Asia be impossible without the modest State subvention for which a correspondent pleaded in our columns last Saturday.—London (Eng.) Times.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Scott Act.

The Scott Act campaign which was inaugurated after the 12th of July, still continues. A number of cases are in prospect.

St. Paul's Church.

The Rev. Principal Grant of Queen's College will preach in St. Paul's Church at both services on Sunday.

JUST arrived, a Fresh Supply of Ladies Picnic Hats, at TURNBULL'S.

St. Luke's Sunday School Picnic

And excursion will be held on Tuesday July 26th per Steamer Golden Eye. Boat leaves wharf at 1 p. m. Tickets 25 cents. 2d17

Gospel Tent.

Messrs. Irving and Marshall will conduct the services in the Gospel Tent, George street, to-morrow as follows:—Afternoon at 4, Evening at 8.30. All are cordially invited.

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee cash, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

LADIES' low shoes in the most beautiful style at KIDD'S.

Coming With a Band.

The Ottawa Free Press says:—"It has been decided that the Canton will turn out on the night of August 8th, being the evening before they leave for Peterborough. At noon on August 9th they will start for that town accompanied by the band of the 43rd Rifles."

Arbitrator.

At a special meeting of the Town Council held on Friday evening Mr. R. W. Errett was appointed arbitrator in the Town's behalf to arbitrate with the County's representative, Mr. H. T. Strickland, upon the amount to be paid by the Town and County respectively, for administration of justice, etc.

REMNANTS of Fine French Dress Goods suitable for Children's wear, sold for less than half price, at TURNBULL'S.

Brought Here to Train.

The Lindsay Post says:—"Mr. George Curtis of Ops, left for Peterborough this week with his trotting stallion, Valentyne, which he intends to train upon the track in that town. The big chesnut possesses great speed and with sufficient work it will require 'a rare good 'un' to do him up. It is to be regretted that there is not sufficient enterprise amongst our local horsemen to place the track in the agricultural park in a state of repair sufficient to enable parties owning horses to develop the same at home instead of forcing them to go to outside towns."

Gun Club.

The Gun Club's weekly pop was held in the Riverside Park on Friday evening. The scores averaged up remarkably well, showing that the club is making progress in the use of the gun. The score is as follows, Messrs. Tivey, Neil and Cameron occupying the place of honor jointly:—

The Lands of the Indians.

The Campbellford Herald says:—"Mr. Thackeray, J.P., of Ainwick, was in Campbellford last week, accompanied by an Indian resident of that township, on business in the interests of the Indians. We are informed that he was empowered to visit the islands in Rice Lake and the Trent River, and to report to the Government the acreage of each, the nature of the soil, and their fertility. From what could be learned from Mr. Thackeray it seems that these islands belong to the Indians, a treaty having been made between them and the Government many years ago, which gives them and their posterity undisputed possession forever. If this be the case, some of the islands which are now in the quiet possession of the whites will have to be given up to their dark brethren."

The Grounds Lighted by Electric Light —Tug of War.

On Friday evening the Amateur Athletic Association grounds, Ashburnham, were lighted by an electric light placed in each corner of the field for the purpose of having sports run off.

Dr. Brennan acted as starter and Messrs. Sailsbury and Greenwood as Judges.

The first event was the 100 yard race. There were four entries. Archie Moore had the race all his own way winning in 11 and two-fifth seconds; Scott and Kirby came in second together.

The one mile bicycle race was won by H. Haultain in 4 minutes and 4 and onn-fifth seconds. A. E. Ames came in second.

The quarter mile was won by Archie Moore easily in 58 seconds. He also won the 120 yard hurdle race with ease in 15 and two-fifth seconds.

The two mile bicycle race and the slow bicycle race were both withdrawn from the programme.

The tug of war between the Association athletes and the Fire Brigade was then called, Dr. Halliday acting as judge for the Association and Mr. E. Clegg for the Firemen. The first tug was pretty evenly balanced, the handkerchief being over the time, however, on the Firemen's side. The next tug was taken by the Firemen easily.

During the evening the Fire Brigade Band furnished enlivening music.

FOUR Pairs of Children's Hose in six sizes for 25c. at TURNBULL'S. Call early if you want any.

Personal.

Bro. E. E. Henderson, District Deputy Grand Master, I. O. O. F., left this morning for New York, to bring back his family who have been visiting in that State. In connection with Bro. Henderson's trip the Dominion Oddfellow says:—"Bro. E. E. Henderson, D.D.G.M., Peterborough, will pass through this city to-morrow a. m. (Saturday), arriving at 12.45 and leaving on the 12.20 G. T. R. for New York, where he goes after his family, who have been visiting in New York State for several weeks past. Bro. Henderson will be in the city again on Tuesday afternoon, the 26th inst., and Wednesday afternoon (the 27th) at the Grand Secretary's office, where any information can be obtained about the Peterborough demonstration, etc., from Bro. Henderson, by brothers in the city, or those who happen to be visiting Toronto at that time."

The Rev. E. F. Torrance is away on his holidays to Murray Bay, Lower St. Lawrence. He spent last week at Stoney Lake.

Mr. P. Henry has returned to town from New York State, where he has been spending a three weeks' holiday.

Mr. Alex. Elliott arrived home to-day. For the past four months he has been on a holiday, sojourning most of the time in San Francisco and Southern California. He met many old citizens of Peterborough, among whom was Mr. John Elder, who is now doing a prasperous dry goods trade in Western Gate. Mr. Elliott is looking exceedingly well, the trip having benefitted his health immensely.

Rev. Dr. Dewart has been appointed by the Ontario Government a member of the Senate of Toronto University in the place of the late Sir Matthew Cameron.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

Clearing Up.

The block of buildings which occupied the corner of George and Simcoe streets, where China Hall now stands, was burned down several years ago, and the block which replaced it was also burned down. Each time the building was erected without taking out the debris which had fallen in the cellar. Mr. Bradburn, owner of the present block, has during the past week been making a thorough clearing out of the rubbish, which was carried away by the waggon load. The place is to be newly fitted up, wide ground bay windows are being built, and the extensive basement will be used as a show and storage room by China Hall.

Suspended.

For some reason work on the Centre Park has been suspended. If anything is going to be done this year it should be done now. It is likely that the fountain will be put in running order by the latter part of November. The water will be cool then and there will be no cost incurred for ice. The fountain, as it is, is very much appreciated by the thirsty pedestrians.

PILES of Remnants of every Department now being cleared out for whatever they will bring, at TURNBULL'S.

The Churches.

The following is a list of services in the several churches to-morrow:—

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.—At St. Peter's Cathedral, Roman Catholic, there will be three masses celebrated, the first at 7 a. m. the second at 8 a. m., and the third at 10.30 a. m. Vespers at 7 p. m.

ST. LUKE'S.—The regular services at St Luke's Church will be conducted as follows: Morning Prayer, Litany and sermon at 11 a. m., evensong at 7 p. m. The Rev. Canon Matheson, of St. John's College, Winnipeg, will preach the sermons.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.—The regular services will be conducted as follows:—Holy Communion at 8.30 a.m.; Morning Prayer, Litany and sermon at 11 a.m.; Evening Prayer and sermon at 7 p.m.

ST. PAUL'S.—The usual services will be held. Rev. Principal Grant, of Queen's College, Kingston, will preach the sermons.

BAPTIST CHURCH, Murray Street.—The pulpit will be occupied by the Rev. Mr. McKay, of Toronto.

METHODIST CHURCH, Charlotte Street.—The Rev. I. Tovell will conduct the services in the morning, and the Rev. F. H. Wallace in the evening.

METHODIST CHURCH, George street.—[illegible] will conduct the services in the morning at 11.00 o'clock, and the Rev. J. C. Wilson in the evening at 7 o'clock.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH.—The usual services will be conducted.

METHODIST CHURCH, Mark street (Ashburnham)—The Rev. J. C. Wilson, pastor, will conduct the services in the morning and the Rev. I. Tovell in the evening.

REMNANTS of Prints and Muslins must all be cleared out this week at Turnbull's. For Genuine Bargains call at TURNBULL'S.

Mr. Romaine Again.

The Mail's Ottawa correspondent says:—"Mr. Robert Romaine, of this city, has just patented an ice-breaking vessel, the object of which is to keep open navigable waters and streams during the winter season. Mr. Romaine claims that two or more breaking machines wintering at Three Rivers could, about the 15th of March, cut their way out of the harbour, and after smashing up all the ice in the channel for a distance of five or ten miles below that city, work their way up to Montreal by the middle of April, clearing the channel entirely of ice and leaving an open passage from Three Rivers to Montreal 300 feet wide wholly unobstructed, and allowing an increased volume of water and ice to pass freely down to tide-water. He believes there is no sure cure for the floods at and around Montreal but by breaking the ice and thus affording a free passage for the extra volume of water in the spring."

The Belmont Cricketers.

The Belmont cricketers, of Philadelphia, defeated the Toronto club on Friday in a one innings match by a score of 181 to 133. "Nomad," the clever correspondent of the Canadian Sportsman, writing from Chatham, Ont., says:—"The Belmonts are unquestionably a rare good all round team. Representing as they do a club with an annual income from membership alone of some $25,000; accustomed to play under the guidance of careful professional coaches, upon grounds valued at $175,000, it is small wonder that they know a 'leetle' about the game."

Early Barley.

A bushel of barley was brought to town to-day by Mr. Robert Hunter, of Fowler's Corners. The sample was bright and plump and brought a good price. Mr. J. Stevenson, agent for Mathews & Co., purchased it as a sample for $2.

A Blank.

There were no registrations at the cells last night and no cases at the Police Court this morning.

Suicide at Barrie.

BARRIE, July 22.—Miss Louisa Hutchinson, head cook at the Simcoe House here for the last five years, committed suicide last night by taking four ounces of laudanum. A coroner's inquest elicited nothing further. Personal misfortune is attributed as the cause.

Arrested for Manslaughter.

ST. THOMAS, July 22.—A warrant was issued for the arrest of Conductor Spettigue, who was in charge of the train that was wrecked, on charge of manslaughter and he was taken into custody.

Mr. Duncan McIntyre, late Vice-President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has been nominated by the Reformers of South Renfrew as their candidate for the House of Commons.

LINDSAY.

SAD DROWNING.—Last Sunday afternoon, a young man named Braniff, was drowned while bathing in the river near Lindsay street south bridge, north of Riverside Cemetery. The body was not recovered for some time afterwards.

ACCIDENT.—On Monday last while Mr. D. Lack, an employee in the G. T. R. shops here, was hewing a stick of timber, his adze struck a knot and glanced off, striking him on the leg, making an ugly gash on the side of the knee. He was conveyed home, and we are glad to learn, under proper medical care, he will soon be able to be about again as usual.

THE DERRY ANNIVERSARY.—On August 12th, the anniversary of the closing of the gates in Derry's Walls, the True Blues, of Lindsay, will visit their Fenelon Falls brethren. It is expected that the Bobcaygeon, Omemee, and Peterborough Britons and True Blues, as well as Lindsay and county Orangemen will attend.—Warder.

THE GLAMOUR OF A NAME.

Mr. Gladstone the Sheet Anchor of the Unionist Party.

The following is the London Times' report of a portion of a recent speech by Colonel Saunderson in the House of Commons. Speaking of Mr. Gladstone he said:—

"He had no doubt that the right hon. gentleman had persuaded himself from his point of view that he was taking a conscientious and patriotic course, and he admitted that many of the gentleman's followers probably took the same opinion, but he believed that they were led away by the glamour of a great name and great eloquence. (Hear, hear.) He believed that when, perhaps, the right hon. gentleman went to another and a more peaceful scene—(Loud cries of 'Oh, oh.' 'Shame' and 'Order' from the Opposition.) He was not speaking of heaven; he was speaking of the House of Lords. (Much laughter.) Then he believed the cause which the right hon. gentleman now maintained in the House of Commons would die a natural death. (Hear, hear.) Far be it from him to wish any evil to the right hon. gentleman. It was true that they were political opponents, but he hoped the right hon. gentleman might long be spared to sit on the Opposition bench. (Cheers and laughter.) He looked upon the right hon. gentleman as the sheet anchor of the Unionist party."

A TOUCHING TRAGEDY.

The Troubles of a Young Couple End in the Suicide of Both.

ST. LOUIS, July 23.—Thomas Abbott, of New York, was educated for the ministry, and was given charge of a church in Canada. He married a girl near Toronto against the wishes of his family and was cast off. He came to St. Louis with his bride five weeks ago and got a job as a silver plater, having learnt the trade before he became a preacher. The couple struggled along in poverty and distress till ten days ago, when the woman died, as the doctor said, from cholera morbus. Next day her husband found a letter written by her before she died in which she declared her intentions of taking her life by poison and begged him to follow her. She told she was to blame for all their trouble.

The second day after Abbott disappeared and his employer got a letter in which Abbott declared his intention of following his wife. In his letter he enclosed his wife's last epistle. Nothing has been heard of him since and it is believed he has committed suicide.

Hanlan Beats Gaudaur.

CHICAGO, July 23.—The Hanlan-Gaudaur race was started at about 8 o'clock this evening. At the outset Gaudaur took the lead, and was half a length ahead as long as the pair could be seen from the press boat. This was scarcely more than the third of the course, for the smoke of the tugs and the darkness speedily hid them from view. Both were pulling thirty-four strokes to the minute. They had turned the stake and were nearly half way to the line before the wretched tub provided as a press boat again allowed a sight of an oarsman. Hanlan was now eight or ten boat lengths ahead of Gaudaur who was astonishingly wide of the course and kept so, notwithstanding friendly shouts from the reporters. At this juncture Gaudaur spurted in a way that showed he could have won if he choose but, though finishing on about equal terms with Hanlan as near as could be judged, was disqualified by his position, and the race was given to Hanlan. Hanlan's time was 20:32; distance three miles.

The Harbor of St. John.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 23.—A mass meeting of citizens was held last night to consider the question of placing the harbor in commission. A resolution in favor of a commission providing compensation to private wharf owners was moved by C. N. Skinner, M.P. It was opposed by Mr. Weldon, M.P., Sheriff Harding, Samuel Schofield and Mr. Ellis, M. P. The meeting was so evenly divided that Mayor Thorne, while inclined to think the majority were opposed to the commission, refused to declare the resolution either lost or carried.

A HEARTLESS SWINDLE.

Men and Girls Victimized by a Bogus Employment Agent.

MONTREAL, July 23.—The Star this evening says:—A few days ago there appeared in several of the city papers the following advertisement:—

WANTED.—255 men and girls to go to the States, a few miles outside of Portland, to work in a silk mill Wages, $1.50 a day.

A large number of "men and girls," accordingly waited on the advertiser, who had taken up his abode at a hotel on St. James street west. There they found a youngish looking man, somewhat undersized, with light hair, and very much browned by the sun. He also displayed a pin apparently of the Masonic style. He was plain spoken, exceedingly suave, but with a furtive glance which avoided his visitor's gaze. The people who called on him were told that the place to which they were bound was Lewiston, not far from Portland, and everything was painted couleur de rose. Work would be interesting, light, and the "company" which was really employing the hands, as alleged by the bogus agent, was, in all respects, a desirable one to work for. So pretty was the picture drawn by the pretended agent who gave the name of Ramsay that one poor widow who was engaged at the rate of $60 a month to do the cooking for a few boarders, sold off her effects and broke up her house, and now mourns over the results of her credulity and confiding tendency. It may be reasonably supposed that Mr. "Ramsay," did not fail to effect his evident purpose of obtaining money from the "hands" he engaged. This was done in a frank and easy manner. A dollar was required, as an evidence of good faith, and a guarantee that the person engaged would duly keep his or her contract. But this was declared to be "merely a matter of form," and the "agent" professed to be thoroughly indifferent to the money, provided that the applicant gave good references. This kindly assurance had its effect, and for the most part the applicants cheerfully paid their dollar, rather than take the trouble to obtain references. In this way some sixty poor people, many being girls, were fleeced. But it suddenly flashed across some one sharper than the rest that there was a law in the United States prohibiting the importation of labor in the manner advertised, and perhaps unwisely for the "agent" understand[illegible] intention of some of the [illegible] engaged to telegraph to Lewiston for information. On learning this "Mr. Ramsay" became indignant and announced, with dignity, that he would have no more to do with the men. The determination of the men, however, seems to have alarmed "Mr. Ramsay," and yesterday his place was vacant; he had quietly folded up his tent and stolen away. Some of his victims say he has gone in the direction of Three Rivers or Quebec. The pretended agent also forgot to pay his hotel bill and had not even time to get his baggage from the station so busy was he and so absorbed in the engagement of labor. He seems to have worked the confidence dodge very successfully, and in so cruel a direction that it is to be hoped he will be apprehended before long and duly punished.

Ramsay is a man of short statute, light curly hair, small moustache, and has the appearance of a mill foreman. He is believed to hail from Cohoes or some other American manufacturing centre, and appears to be well up in milling matters.

THE FISHERIES.

What the Minister of Fisheries Says Regarding Alleged Poaching.

ST. JOHN, N. B., July 23.—Interviewed regarding the alleged poaching by Yankee fishermen, the Minister of Fisheries, Hon. Mr. Foster, who has just made a cursie of the fishing grounds, said: "The rumors concerning poaching are very indefinite but whenever a special instance has been alleged an investigation has been made, with result going to show that the rumors were unfounded. There was either a mistake as to the distance from shore at which the fishing was carried on or in the class of vessels alleged to be fishing. The fact is that considering the extent of our coast, the amount of poaching is reduced to a minimum and very few actual instances have been brought to the notice of the department. The patrol of the cruisers is well marked out, is carefully followed, and is kept up sharply. The United States vessels themselves have, as I believe, strict orders to obey the law and keep outside the line. They show a well defined disposition to obey these orders. I have myself seen imperative instructions to United States fishermen, warning them to keep out of Canadian harbors, even when dressing their fish, for fear of running into trouble. American fishermen cheerfully obey the Canadian customs laws, entering immediately on coming into port, and in their intercourse with our cruisers they are always anxious to find out just what the regulations are and to adhere to them. I may say that captains of United States war vessels in our waters board their own fishermen, and give them similar instructions. Customs laws are being as strictly enforced as last year, the only difference being that in places remote from a custom house when United States vessels come in seeking shelter the commander of the cruiser, who is also customs officer on that particular station, is authorized to enter and clear these vessels. Any insinuations either that the law is not strictly enforced or that customs regulations are disregarded are not to be believed in the slightest degree. Mackerel this year have been well in shore. Around Prince Edward Island many have been taken in the harbors themselves by the old method of hook and line, and our fishermen as a rule are doing well, while up to this time catch of United States vessels in their own waters has been poor. A notable feature this year is the increased number of mackerel seiners fitted out by our own people, many ports having doubled the number of last year. Our people are pleased to have the inshore fisheries kept exclusively for them. And now that United States fishermen are kept out our people show a disposition to fit out vessels and reap the harvest for themselves. I find our fishermen hearty in their support of protective service, and much more inclined than they were last year to assist in it. The expression is often heard, "We will be satisfied if we can keep our fisheries for ourselves."

ERIE RAILWAY HORROR.

An Eyewitness Describes the Killing of Ten Italian Navvies.

NEW YORK, July 23.—There will be no inquest on the bodies of the ten Italian laborers killed on the Erie railway near Jersey City. A spectator of the disaster relates the following: The last two cars of the milk train was on one side of the working gang when the express locomotive reached the bewildered men. Screams and yells were heard, and an instant later the air was dotted with human limbs, pieces of flesh, tools and articles of clothing. Several men were hurled bodily right and left. The two trains had not dissappeared around the curves, going in opposite directions, when the cries of the injured and uninjured were heard. Men with torn limbs and lascerated flesh writhed in agony or struggled to their feet and staggered about blindly until prostrated by the shock or loss of blood.

One eyewitness was reminded by the convulsive actions of some of the injured of a lot of chickens whose heads had just been cut off. The man who had made that comparison said he ran to the help of one fellow who clutched wildly like a drowning man. The dying Italian's fingers became gripped so tightly about the other's wrist that he had great difficulty in freeing himself.

Near the track was found a bare leg which had been cut off below the knee, the brains of one victim covered a cross tie, viscera of a third bespattered a pile of ballaststones. Lying between the east and west-bound tracks was a piece of flesh that had been torn from somebody's body, while all along the roadbed and down the east embankment were remnants of clothing and great hobnailed brogans that looked as if they had been torn violently from the wearer's feet. The soft black and brown felt hats with bright colored bands peculiar to emigrants from Italy lay where they had fallen. Those Italians who had escaped by tumbling down the embankment or jumping to one side of the track, scrambled and ran back to where their comrades were strewn like men who had fallen in battle. They wrung their hands, gesticulated and moaned in a way painful to hear and witness.

And yet, notwithstanding the intimacy of the men, it was impossible to get one of them to assist in removing the dead and injured. They seemed afraid to touch their dead comrades, and nobody could blame them. When Father [illegible] came to assist one of the wounded Italians who escaped, they gathered around him menacingly. One drew a knife and exclaimed, "You kilia my brother, I kilia you." Fortunately the murderous hand was stayed in time.

Among the first to arrive on the scene was the Rev. G. W. Corrigan, of the Roman Catholic church in Honokus, a brother of Archbishop Corrigan. He knelt down by those who were mortally hurt and not unconscious and gave them absolution. One man died with his rosary of beads in his hand. Another ministering visitor to the scene was Mrs. Elijah Rosencranz, who brought brandy for the injured and tendered the use of her house. Other residents in the city flocked to the spot and did what they could.

A construction train, which had been following the milk train, was stopped and the injured men were transported to Paterson, and conveyed in ambulances to St. Joseph's hospital. Coroner Andrew Dedrick, of the township of Orville, who lives in Hackensack, was summoned, and directed that the dead bodies be removed to a little tool house opposite Prospect station. Before this was done the clothing of each man was searched in order to identify him. When Italians are employed they are numbered. A red or yellow tag with his particular number is given each, and is generally carried in a little tin box used also as a purse. With two exceptions all the Italians were identified yesterday by their tags, and the tags of the unknown could not be found.

Contesting Stewart's Will.

NEW YORK, July 23.—Mrs. J. Lawrence Smith, niece of the late Mrs. Stewart, has brought suit against Judge Hilton for an account and to set aside the transfer of the Stewart dry goods business, made by Mrs. Stewart in 1876 to Judge Hilton, as unlawful and against the rights of the heirs, and as not in accordance with the intention of Mr. Stewart as expressed in his will. The $1,000,000 willed to Judge Hilton was intended, it is declared, as a full discharge of all obligations of the estate to the judge for conducting or closing out the business. Mrs. Smith is mother-in-law of Prescott Hall Butler, who has a suit pending against Mr. Hilton to break up Mrs. Stewart's will on the ground of undue influence.

St. John Church Troubles.

ST. JOHN, N. B., July 23.—Judge Palmer refuses to grant an interim order restraining Rev. G. G. Roberts from holding divine service in St. Ann's church, Fredericton, on account of his ritualistic practices, allowing the case to go down for hearing. Judge Palmer suggests that the whole matter be settled by arbitration, thus obviating the necessity of dragging church methods and practices before the courts.

A London Lady Missing.

LONDON, Ont., July 23.—The daughter of Dr. Rourke, of this city, left her home on Wednesday afternoon and nothing has since been heard of her. The young lady is 18 years of age. Her parents can assign no reason for her absence and are in state of great anxiety. The police have failed to get any trace of her whereabouts.

Nova Scotia Bishopric.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 23.—Dr. Nichols has finally declined to allow himself to be nominated for the Nova Scotia bishopric, and pledges his support to Archdeacon Gilpin, administrator of the diocese, who has agreed to accept the See if elected by the Synod.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

THE SAME ALL OVER.

LONDON, July 24.—The Earl of Aberdeen, who arrived at Queenstown to-day from New York, on the steamer Servia, was interviewed on the Irish question. He spoke in the highest terms of the Irish "all over the world."

O'BRIEN ON THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 24.—An interview was had to-day with Wm. O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, on the subject of the Irish Land Bill. Mr. O'Brien said that the first effect of the measure would be to bankrupt and destroy the Government, which had purchased office with concessions destructive to the Conservative party. After a bitter struggle of six months, he said, the Ministry had adopted Mr. Parnell's bill and it was the plan of campaign that had forced them to pursue the present course.

RUSKIN VERY ILL.

LONDON, July 23.—During the past fortnight Mr. Ruskin has been so ill that he has been compelled to keep h's bed. He suffers from extreme prostration and takes hardly any food. A doctor is in daily atttendance His condition causes his friends some anxiety, though it is not considered critical.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

BERLIN, July 23.—Advices from Metz and other frontier garrisons report renewed activity in military movements. The troops at Colmar and Mulhausen began on Thursday a series of manœuvres along the frontier between Mulhausen and Markuch to last seven days. Extensive frontier barracks are being constructed. The balloon department reports that a successful trial has been made of hurling masses of explosives on fort works.

A JUBILEE REVIEW.

The Queen Witnesses a Gathering of the English Naval Force.

PORTSMOUTH, July 23.—This city has been thronged for days past by crowds gathered to witness the jubilee naval review at Spithead, and the harbour has been crowded with crafts of every description. The crowds were immensely augmented by visitors from all parts of the Kingdom.

The whole scene surveyed just before 3 o'clock, when the naval vessels were all in place, their decorations full flung and their crews in holiday pose, the private craft hurrying to good places, and the multitudes ashore packing themselves to best see the event of the day, was glorious in the extreme. Probably no such fleet was ever seen before in time of peace. Every class of the British navy was represented.

The review of the Crimean fleet by the Queen and the Prince Consort thirty-two years ago would suffer by comparison with this. Some of the stout wooden ships which figured in that review were visible in Portsmouth harbor to-day, decked out for the occasion. Nelson's old ship, the Victory, was also a conspicuous object, and her old timbers echoed again and again as boat after boat passed her, the full complement cheering vociferously. More than that, the old ship mounted a gun or two and joined in the universal salute to the Queen.

Shortly after 2 o'clock, when order was perceptible on the water, the Euphrates, the Crocodile and the Malabar proceeded to the westward of Osborne and stood in readiness to escort the royal yachts when the Queen embarked at 3 o'clock to review the fleet. The Queen left Osborne House a few minutes before 3 o'clock and went aboard the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert. Her Majesty left the buoy in Osborne Bay promptly at 3 o'clock. She was preceded by the Trinity yacht and was followed by the royal yachts Osborne and Alberta and the ships Enchantress, Helicon, Euphrates, Crocodile and Malabar.

The royal procession proceeded straight to its destination and passed between the lines, leaving the coast defence ships, gun boats and torpedo boats on the port hand. After proceeding as far as the Horse Elbow Buoy the Victoria and Albert turned to the starboard, passed between the two columns of large ships forming A, B and C squadrons, and then between the lines of foreign ships of war. As her Majesty passed through the lines of these endless wa ships, each yard being manned with brawny tars, deafening cheer after was sent up from the lusty crews to greet their sovereign, but it was not until the Queen had gone through the double lines that the great cannon of the big ships began to thunder forth the royal salute with a roar that caused the great vessels to roll and the sea to increase its heaving as shot after shot came booming over the water.

In such vessels as had no masts the turrets, breastworks and decks were lined by Jack Tars, and the Queen had no reason to complain of her reception, either on her progress down the line or on her return to Osborne, which was safely reached about 6 o'clock. Taken altogether the vessels drawn up in line when the Queen passed extended over four miles, and even this length was added to by the great troopships ladened with spectators also falling into line and saluting the Queen as she made her progress.

The ships and the town are illuminated to-night. Electric search lights are sweeping the fleet and the spectacle afloat and ashore has never been equalled.

OUR IRON ORE.

WHEN Sir Charles Tupper induced the Parliament of Canada at its last session to adopt the policy of manufacturing our own iron from our own ore, we pointed out that it necessarily followed that we should impose a duty on iron ore exported from the country. At the time we stood alone (as far as we observed) in contending that now we were remedying the flaw in the N. P. of neglecting to foster a Canadian industry, it would be folly to continue the system of sending our rich ore to the United States, that their manufacturers might have the profit of selling it back to us in the shape of iron goods. Now, however, we are glad to see that the Toronto World is forcibly inculcating the same view. Other truly Canadian journals will probably fall into line. The World says:—

"But even Sir Charles, thorough-going Minister of the N. P. as he is, left one weak spot, which, let us hope, he will have made strong ere another session of Parliament passes. It is not enough to create favourable conditions for making Canadian ore into merchantable iron at home; we must also place upon it an export duty heavy enough to prevent its going out of the country to feed American furnaces. This latter is the complementary and, in fact, the indispensable finishing-touch to what has been already done. We must as soon as possible let Messrs. Wiman and Butterworth understand, not alone that they will not get Canada as a market for American iron, but further, that they will get no more Canadian ore out of which to make American iron, in New York State, Ohio and Pennsylvania furnaces."

Furnaces are not likely to be started in Ontario as long as the present owners of our richest iron mines, most of whom are, or are connected with, iron manufacturers in the United States, think that they can use our ore as a cheap supply for their foreign furnaces. As soon as Parliament meets a protective policy should be adopted.

THE only produce of Canadian farms as to which it has been so far shown that reciprocity would, at present, give better prices, is barley, which is required in the United States to make beer. Certain Reform organs, which also pretend to be advocates of total abstinence, are clamourous that Canadian farmers should obtain the profit of selling more barley at a higher price to the United States brewers. We say these organs "pretend," because they never favour a temperance candidate if he is a Conservative, and now they are further showing their hypocrisy by urging that our farmers should be allowed a greater share of the profit of making beer.

THE Globe is doing a good service at the present juncture by showing conclusively an increase of Canadian imports from Great Britain under the National Policy. The Globe is, however, a little astray in imagining that the friends of the N. P. did not expect such a result. The advocates of the N. P. claimed that while reserving the Canadian market for Canadian manufactures of staples goods such as we wished to make in our own country, it would on the whole augment our imports from Great Britain, by increasing the demand for other articles. This prophecy, though ridiculed at the time, has been happily fulfilled.

MR. MERCIER has told a deputation of bankers and business men that he is determined to exact the commercial corporation tax with arrears in full, though he strongly opposed the measure when it was introduced. One reason he gave was that the English speaking Protestants in the Local House had opposed him. Mr. Mercier seems to regard taxes as fines to be inflicted on his political opponents.

IN two separate articles recently, the Toronto Globe has pointed out, as we had done before it, that the "corners" in the United States had injured farmers by holding back produce and stimulating its production elsewhere. Yet the Globe and its friends ask us to adopt commercial union with these injurious and dishonest gambling rings.

FROM ALL OVER.

The banquet of the Lord Mayor of London to the ministers is fixed for August 10th.

A close season has been instituted for herrings of the coast of Charlotte County, New Brunswick.

The Prince of Wales will preside at the Welsh Eisteddfod on August 12th. It is expected the Queen will attend.

Headache, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, and Indigestion relieved and at once by Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. Try it. Samples free.

It is reported that an arrangement has been made between the King and Queen of Servia, that no official divorce will take place.

It is rumoured that ex-Mayor Beaugrand, of Montreal, will start an English Liberal evening newspaper in that city early in September.

The Wimbledom competition concluded on Friday. The Canadian team did well, and, in addition to capturing the Prince of Wales badge, took a large number of money prizes.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It will do you good. Sold by all Druggists. 50.

The contract for building a permanent dyke at Point St. Charles to protect the city of Montreal from the annually recurring floods was awarded on Friday, the price being $70,000.

Bradstreet's reports a total of 176 failures throughout the country during the week ending July 22nd, against 172 for the week previous. Twenty-four of the number were in Canada, two less than the preceding week.

Dr. E. V. Wright, Saratoga Springs, New work, says: "I have used it for years, and my experience has proved beyond question that the peculiar combination of phosphates renders it most valuable in the treatment of digestive disorders."

BROUGHT TO CANADA.

Although but recently established in Canada, the Gale Sulky Harrow Company, of Detroit and Windsor, has invested a large amount of capital in completing the factory for the manufacture of their implements, which have already met with such high favor in this country. Although the money for the establishment of the works was furnished by such men as D. M. Ferry and other equally well-known American capitalists, Mr. Hall, the manager, has made the concern distinctly Canadian, as with one exception every employee is a Canadian, and every dollar spent for material is the product of Canadian manufacture. The establishment of such a wealthy institution in the Province is only one of the many beneficial results of the National Policy, of which Mr. Hall, the general manager, is an ardent supporter.—Chatham Planet.

TOOK FOR A GOOSE.

After all the fuss that has been made about the desirability of getting Canadian eggs into the States duty free, it is consoling to know that the American incubators get their eggs in free, and produce any quantity of "broilers." Mr. Wiman's base attempt to deceive the Canadian hen has met with merited exposure. He mistook her for a goose.—Toronto World.

STATUE UNVEILED.

PARIS, July 23.—A statue of Pope Urban II was unveiled yesterday at Chatillon, his birth place, in the presence of the Papal nuncio at Paris, and the Archbishop of Paris. The Archbishop at Rheims and twenty-three bishops were also present. Bishop Freppel delivered an eloquent address. There was a procession through the streets in the evening, and the town was illuminated.

GAMBLING WITH PRODUCE

In the late wheat corner it was a question of storage room for the grain. In the pork corner which ended with last month the limitation was principally one of time when the meat was first put into the barrel. It is undeniable that pork packed in March is just as good for eating as that packed in February, other things being equal, but three weeks ago it was not worth as much on the market by some $3 per package. It goes without saying that the wheat stored in Duluth or Milwaukee last month was worth just about as much for shipment to the East or to Europe as was that in the elevator in Chicago, but to the party who wanted it for the purpose of filling contracts made under the rules of our Board of Trade there was a very wide difference in value. It paid people to bring pork from Cleveland and wheat from Duluth to to be delivered to men in Chicago who had no real use for the property than to ship it to other points which could have been reached at far less expense from the places above named.—Chicago Tribune.

PERMANENT INJURY.

The operations of the rings which "make corners," as the phrase goes, in the great staple exports of the United States are doing much permanent injury to that country. The speculative operations in wheat have done much to develop the production of wheat in other countries in which merchants were willing to sell at a fair profit. The injury thus done to the United States as a wheat exporting country is very serious.—Toronto Globe (Annexationist.)

Thoroughly cleanse the blood which is the fountain of health, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution will be established.

Golden Medical Discovery cures all humors, from the common pimple, blotch, or eruption, to the worst Scrofula, or blood-poison. Especially has it proven its efficacy in curing Salt-rheum or Tetter, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Eating Ulcers.

Golden Medical Discovery cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating, and nutritive properties. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. It promptly cures the severest Coughs.

SHOULD BE HONEST.

The Peterborough REVIEW, a smart Tory paper, is after the Mail with a sharp stick. The latter has neither fairly stated nor squarely answered the REVIEW'S arguments upon the coal question, which make a gainst the theory that free trade is both a cheap and profitable boon. The Mail ought to be honest with its readers, particularly at a time when it aspires to capture the Globe's old constituency by straightforward effort.—Toronto World.

"Shortness of breath Caused my death,"

is inscribed on a tombstone in an English grave-yard. In all probability it would never have been necessary, if only the poor unfortunate victim of some disease of the respiratory organs had known of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a panacea for all diseases of the throat and lungs. For consumption it is believed to be the only real specific yet known. For all scrofulous and blood diseases it is unfailing.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

BESSIE IS PUT TO THE QUESTION.

Meanwhile another little tragedy was being enacted at the back of the house. After the one eyed witch doctor Hendrik had knocked Silas Croft down and assisted in the pleasing operation of dragging him to the flagstaff, it had occurred to his villainous heart that the present would be a good opportunity to profit personally by the confusion, and possibly to add to the Englishman's misfortunes by doing him some injury on his own account. Accordingly, just before Frank Muller began to read the dispatch announcing the English surrender, he slipped away into the house, which was now totally deserted, to see what he could steal. Passing into the sitting room, he annexed Bessie's gold watch and chain, which was lying on the mantelpiece, a present that her uncle had made her on the Christmas day before the last. Having pocketed this he proceeded to the kitchen, where there was a goodly store of silver forks and spoons that Bessie had been engaged in cleaning that morning, lying on the dresser ready to be put away. These he also transferred, to the extent of several dozens, to the capacious pockets of the tattered military great coat that he wore. While doing so he was much disturbed by the barking of the dog Stomp, the [illegible] had mauled him so severely a few weeks before, and who was now, as it happened, tied up in his kennel—an old wine barrel—just outside the kitchen door. Hendrik peeped out of the window, and having ascertained that the dog was secured, proceeded, with a diabolical chuckle, to settle his account with the poor animal. He had left his gun behind on the grass, but he still held his assegai in his hand, and, going out of the kitchen door with it, he showed himself within a few feet of the kennel. The dog recognized him instantly, and went nearly mad with fury, making the most desperate efforts to break its chain and get at him. For some moments he stood exciting the animal by derisive gestures and pelting it with stones, till at last, fearing that the clamor would attract attention, he suddenly transfixed it with his spear, and then, thinking that he was quite unobserved, sat down and snuffed and enjoyed the luxury of watching the poor beast's last agonies.

But, as it happened, he was not quite alone, for, creeping along in the grass and rubbish that grew on the further side of the wall, his brown body squeezed tightly against the brown stones so tightly that an unpracticed eye would certainly have failed to observe it at a distance of across [illegible] was the Hottentot Jantje occasionally too, he would lift his head above the level of the wall and observe the proceedings of the one eyed man. Apparently he was undecided what to do, for he hesitated a little, and while he did so Hendrik killed the dog.

Now Jantje had all a Hottentot's natural love for animals, which is, generally speaking, as marked as is the Kaffir's callousness toward them, and he was particularly fond of the dog Stomp, which always went out walking with him on those rare occasions when he thought it safe or desirable to walk like an ordinary man, instead of creeping from bush to bush like a panther, or wriggling through the grass like a snake. The sight of the animal's death, therefore, raised in his black breast a very keen desire for vengeance on the murderer, if vengeance could be safely accomplished; and he paused to reflect if this could be done. As he did so Hendrik got up, gave the dead dog a kick, withdrew his assegai from the carcass, and then, as though struck by a sudden desire to conceal the murder, undid the collar, and, lifting the dog in his arms, carried him with difficulty into the house and laid him under the kitchen table. This done he came out again to the wall, which was built of loose, unmortared stones, pulled one out without trouble, deposited the watch and the silver he had stolen in the cavity, and replaced the stone. Next, before Jantje could guess what he meant to do, he proceeded to make it practically impossible for his robbery to be discovered, or, at any rate, very improbable, by lighting a match, and, having first glanced round to see that nobody was looking, reaching up and applying it to the thick thatch with which the house itself was roofed, and of which the fringe just here was not more than nine feet from the ground. No rain had fallen at Mooifontein for several days, and there had been a hot sun and dry wind, and, as a result, the thatch was as dry as tinder. The light caught in a second, and in two more a thin line of fire was running up the roof.

Hendrik paused, stepped a few paces back, resting his shoulders against the wall, immediately the other side of which was Jantje, and proceeded to chuckle aloud and rub his hands as he admired the results of his handiwork. This was too much for the Hottentot on the farther side. The provocation was too great, and so was the opportunity. In his hand was the thick stick on which he was so fond of cutting notches. Raising it in both hands he brought the heavy knob down with all his strength upon the one eyed villain's unprotected skull. It was a thick skull, but the knob prevailed against it and fractured it, and down went the estimable witch doctor as though he were dead.

Next, taking a leaf out of his fallen enemy's book, Jantje slipped over the wall, and, seizing the senseless man, dragged him by one arm into the kitchen and rolled him under the table to keep company with the dead dog. Then, filled with a fearful joy, he slipped out, shutting and locking the door behind him, and crept round to a point of vantage in a little plantation seventy or eighty yards to the right of the house, whence he could watch the conflagration that he knew must ensue, for the fire had taken instant and irremediable hold, and also see what the Boers were doing.

Ten minutes or so afterward that amiable character Hendrik partially regained his senses, to find himself surrounded by a sea of fire, in which he perished miserably, not having power to move, and his feeble cries being totally swallowed up and lost in the fierce roaring of the flames, even had there been anybody there to hear them. And that was the very appropriate end of Hendrik and the magic of Hendrik.

Down by the flagstaff the old man lay in his fit, with Bessie tending him and a posse of Boers standing round, smoking and laughing or lounging about with an air of lordly superiority well worthy of victors in possession.

"Will none of you help me to take him to the house?" she cried. "Surely you have ill treated an old man enough."

Nobody stirred, not even Frank Muller, who was gazing at her tear stained face with a fierce smile playing round the corners of his clean cut mouth, which his beard was trimmed to leave clear.

"It will pass, Miss Bessie," he said; "it will pass. I have often seen such fits. They come from too much excitement, or too much drink"——

Suddenly he broke off with an exclamation, and pointed to the house, from the roof of which pale curls of blue smoke were rising.

"Who has fired the house?" he shouted. "By Heaven! I will shoot the man."

The Boers started round and stared in astonishment, and as they did so the tinder like roof burst into a broad sheet of flame that grew and gathered breadth and height with an almost marvelous rapidity. Just then, too, a light breeze sprang up from over the hill at the rear of the house, as it sometimes did at this time of the day, and bent the flames over toward them in an immense arch of fire, so that the fumes and heat and smoke began to beat upon their faces.

"Oh, the house is burning down!" cried Bessie, utterly bewildered by this new misfortune.

"Here, you!" shouted Muller to the gaping Boers, "go and see if anything can be saved. Phew! we must get out of this," and, stooping down, he picked up Silas Croft in his arms and walked off with him, followed by Bessie, toward the plantation on their left, which was the same where Jantje had taken refuge. In the center of this plantation was a little glade surrounded by young orange and blue gum trees. Here he put the old man down upon a bed of dead leaves and soft, springy grass, and then hurried away, without a word, to the fire, only to find that the house was utterly unapproachable. In fifteen minutes, such was the rapidity with which the flames did their work upon the mass of dry straw and the wooden roof and floorings beneath, the whole of the interior of the house was a glowing, incandescent pile, and in half an hour it was completely gutted, nothing being left standing but the massive outer walls of stone, over which a dense column of smoke hung like a pall. Mooifontein was a blackened ruin; only the stables and outhouses, which were roofed with galvanized iron, being left uninjured.

Frank Muller had not been gone five minutes when, to Bessie's joy, her uncle opened his eyes and sat up.

"What is it? what is it?" he said. "Ah! I recollect. What is all this smell of fire? Surely they have not burned the place?"

"Yes, uncle," sobbed Bessie, "they have."

The old man groaned. "It took me ten years to build, bit by bit, almost stone by stone, and now they have destroyed it. Well, why not? God's will be done! Give me your arm, Jess, and let me get to the water. I feel faint and sick."

She did as he bade her, sobbing bitterly. Within fifteen yards, on the edge of the plantation, was a little spruit or runnel of water, and of this he drank copiously and bathed his wounded head and face.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order. Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—"Civil Service Gazette."

Moving an Engine.

Mr. Allen McCarthy, mover of houses, is engaged in moving the ponderous engine in the Romaine brick works from one end of the building to the other. The engine weighs thirty-six tons, but such is the facility of the moving apparatus that one horse draws it.

The Belmonts.

The Philadelphia cricketers played at Hamilton on Saturday, and defeated the cricketers of that city in a one innings match by 165 to 105 runs. The Belmonts won every match played in Canada on their present trip, having beaten Windsor, Listowel, Peterborough, Chatham, Toronto and Hamilton.

Commission Issued.

Among the commissions issued by the Dominion Government under the "Act Respecting Public Officers," announced in the Canada Gazette, is the following:—"Thomas Cahill, of the town of Peterborough, in the Province of Ontario, Esquire; Inspector of Gas and Gas Meters for the town of Peterborough, in said Province, from 30th October 1880."

The Bold Burglar.

About two o'clock this morning Mr. J. J. Turner, Brock street, heard the front shop door-bell ring. He lay still for a few minutes thinking it was someone ringing the bill for mischief. Then he felt a queer sensation come over him and he attempted to get up. He had just raised himself a little when a hand from the darkness was clapped over his mouth and something was forced between his lips. He struggled up, however, and, though half dazed, shouted "thieves" as loud as he could shout. When a lamp was lighted the burglar had evaporated through the side door. Mr. Turner had a similar experience about three years ago, while living in Port Hope. He and his family were completely drugged, and even the dogs were that drowsy that they could hardly open their eyes. In the meantime the burglars had "gone through" the house.

Unseemly Levity.

While St Paul's church services were being conducted on Sunday evening the congregation and preacher were much disturbed by shouts and laughter in the Horticultural Gardens. It seemed that there was a seat, two legs of which were broken off. Two slender sticks were placed to prop up the seat and whenever anyone came along to sit down over they would go, while everyone in the Gardens cheered at the victim. Once the seat was propped up and a gentleman came along and sat down but the sticks were two strong. He didn't go over, but instead deliberately pulled out a newspaper and started to read. Another man came up looking weary and seeing a vacant place on the seat resignedly added his weight, when over the both went. Some ladies who were in the Gardens narrowly escaped a bad fall. Mr. Blade was absent from the Gardens unfortunately, else such unseemly conduct on a Sunday evening would have been stopped.

SERMONS BY EMINENT PREACHERS IN THE CHURCHES.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH.

At St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, on Sunday the Rev. Canon Matheson, of St. John's College, Winnipeg, officiated at both the morning and evening services. He preached two sermons, clothing them in eloquent but simple language and drawing plain and practical lessons therefrom for his hearers. In the evening he chose for his text John vi., 68:—"Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." He referred to the incident that brought forth these words from St. Peter, the Lord apparently having many followers at this time, who became offended at some of His words, and went back, and walked no more with Him. He said that such times came to us in our lives, when we see many leaving sacred things to attend to other things on which their hearts were set, and what was wanted these days was men who would take the noble stand St. Peter did, and show by a consistent walk that Christ was the only one that could satisfy them. He said that men would go after something; that fallen man had felt there was something lacking in him ever since the beginning that only eternal life would satisfy. He showed the alternatives these offended followers might choose, instead of Christ, such as Judaism, with its two sects of Pharisees and Sadducees, or Paganism, and showed also what people might choose these days instead of Christ, mentioning that Judaism was still in existence, and there was Formalism, in referring to which he said that some forms were very empty and some forms were very full of meaning, and that a distinction should be drawn. Agnosticism also was drawing many, who prided themselves on their choice. But when you went to it for help, or comfort or hope, they could give you none, because they say they are not sure of anything. You asked them for bread, they gave you a stone; you asked them for a fish, they gave you a scorpion; they wanted to tear down the old house that had sheltered and protected us and our forefathers for generations without producing anything with which to build us a better one. Then there was that fatal, widespread Futurism, in which so many people, who wrote Church of England, or Presbyterian, or Methodist after their names on the census roll, and did not go much farther, and were satisfying themselves with the hope that some future day they would attend to the matter of salvation. He said there was nothing in Christ's words about a future salvation, which you might get some day, or at a time when life was leaving you. He exhorted them to go to Christ instead of these things, who had the words of eternal life, which, like the leaven, would work silently and steadily in them till it influenced their whole being, transforming them into fit candidates for the heavenly kingdom.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.

The people of Peterborough again had the opportunity to hear two eloquent discourses from Principal Grant on Sunday, when he occupied the pulpit of St. Paul's Church, in the absence of the Rev. E. F. Torrance who is now away on a holiday trip. Large congregations were out to hear the Principal both morning and evening. The text of the morning sermon was Hebrews, vi, 1—"Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentence for dead works and of the faith toward God." A contention had been waged in the church, he said, as to the possibility of living a sinless life in this world; and those who argued in the affirmative often quoted this passage in support of their argument. But this passage had nothing to do with such a question. It had a totally different meaning. "Let us go on unto perfection" meant "let us go on unto full growth" as the concluding verses of the previous chapter showed. The Apostle spoke of those Christians who made use of milk as being unskilful in the word of righteousness "for he was a babe," while those who left the first food and chose the strong meat exhibited growth and development. He spoke, too, of the mere foundation builder, for of what use was a foundation without the superstructure. He did not wish to detract from the importance of a good foundation, but it would be better to have the poorest shanty in the place than a foundation merely. The Hebrew Church at this period was in a state of arrested growth—of incomplete development. Since the establishment of the Hebrew Church up till the time the Apostle wrote marvellous progress had been made. It was the first of the Christian Churches. Thousands were gathered in, until it looked as if all Palestine would become Christian. But now they stopped to discuss about the outward forms and they came to a standstill. Now it was that the Apostle exhorted them to put away this useless contention and to go on to the full stature of Christians. There was no such thing as a sinless life, and those who said they led sinless lives generally lived lives far from it. In order to see the meaning of the letter written, a glance would have to be taken at the condition of the Hebrews. They were still shrouded with Judaism, through embracing Christianity. They still attached great importance to outward forms. Paul must be careful not to offend their prejudices. Did not Christ teach even in the same manner when speaking in parables—half uncovering the truth and half veiling it? He had even to leave unsaid much to His own Apostles, leaving the Spirit to teach them what He had not taught. So Paul wrote in a gentle way, though his meaning was apparent. The Principal closed with an appeal to the people to lead earnest, real, Christian lives.

THE GOSPEL TENT.

The evangelists, Messrs. Irving and Marshall, have been carrying on evangelical meetings in a tent near Mr. Peter Hamilton's foundry for the past four weeks. The tent is fitted inside with three rows of seats, capable of seating about one hundred and fifty people. In the afternoon when the sun is beating at the west side, the eastern side of the tent is unhooked to preserve coolness, and the preacher and people can be seen from the street. Both the evangelists are able men. They speak in a vigorous manner, and no one can help being convinced of their earnestness. Mr. Irving leads the singing with a pleasing baritone voice. On Sunday afternoon Mr. Irving spoke of the Israelites in the wilderness, and of the people chiding with Moses on account of there being no water to drink. Then Moses was instructed to smite the rock, and the water gushed forth and the people stooped and drank. "Christ," said he, "has been smitten, and the water of life flows freely, but the great trouble is people won't stoop down to drink." Mr. Marshall announced that they didn't preach sermons; it wasn't in their line. But they asked people such important questions as this:—"Are you prepared now to meet God?" They did not preach; they talked to the people. He spoke of the difficulty to bring the light to some. When Zaccheus was bidden by Christ to come down from the tree he came down and received Christ joyfully. But some there were who perched themselves in a tree of morality or some other tree and refused to come down. One peculiarity about these services is that no collections are taken up. The evangelists live in a part of the tent curtained off from the rest.

Mr. Marshall says that they have been successful since they came here. "How do we support ourselves without collections?" "Well, we appear simply as Christians preaching God's word and we believe that if God wants us to preach that he will support us. If he did not keep us we would take that as an indication that He wanted us to go to work. For mind you we regard work as being honourable."

NORWOOD.

EAST RIDING EXHIBITION.—The nineteenth annual exhibition of the East Riding of Peterborough Agricultural Society will be held in Norwood on the 11th and 12th of October. Over $1,000 in premiums will be offered. The posters announcing the same and prize lists in book form will be issued in a few days.

GRASS FIRES.—The residents of "east end" had their hands full on Thursday last. The tall, dry grass on the hills in that vicinity was set on fire in some unknown manner and the flames at once commenced to spread. A large force went up from the village and finally succeeded in getting the fire extinguished, but not until it had ran over acres and acres of meadow. Considerable effort was required to save the fences and other property in danger. The Fire Brigade was not called out.—Register.

GENUINE French goat boots for ladies' at KIDD'S for $1.75 per pair.

The Other Side.

The Toronto World says a proposition was made to "saw-off" the West Durham protest against that entered in Kingston, but the offer came not from Sir John to Mr. Blake, but from the chief Opposition whip to the chief Ministerialist whip. In other words, Mr. James Trow, member for South Perth, leader of the Reform whips in the House of Commons, made the proposition which was refused, not by Mr. Blake, but by Sir John. Under these circumstances it would seem that the Globe and its followers have been on the scent of the wrong guilty conscience.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

TREASURE-TROVE.

Annapolis Royal Excited over the Discovery of Script and Coin.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 25.—Annapolis Royal, the oldest town in British America, is greatly excited over the discovery, on Saturday, [illegible] and was made in an old cellar dug by the French. There was over $2,000 worth of continental script, dated 1660. The coins were either German or Russian. The old cellar was underneath a house owned by ex-Sheriff Bonnett. He is an octogenarian, and the property has been in his and his father's family over a century. It was once the location of the residence of the French Governor of the place. There was a grand party there one night, and during the drunken revelry that followed, tradition says the Indians came down and scalped and horribly mutilated and tortured the whole crowd. Superstition prevented people from living in the house thereafter. The property fell into decay. Half a century ago Sheriff Bonnett put up the present house, but had no idea of the existence of a filled-up cellar, on the walls of which thousands of dollars were hidden. Excavations being made on Saturday led to the discovery. The search will be continued to-day.

DARING BANK ROBBERY.

A Bank Entered at Midday and the Money Drawer Carried Off.

PORT HURON, Mich., July 25.—A daring midday bank robbery has just leaked out. On Saturday, at noon, the clerks at the Commercial Bank closed up for dinner as usual, taking the money drawer into the vault, leaving the same on the cash safe, and locking the vault only by the day lock. The bank windows were left open, with the inside blinds closed. On the return of the clerks it was found that some daring burglar had entered the back window, opened the vault, and carried off all the currency in the cash drawer. Chief of Police Carson was called and placed the matter in the hands of Detective Buckeridge, who is busily engaged on a scent. A meeting of the directors was held this morning, the subject thoroughly canvassed, and business goes on as though nothing had happened. The amount of the haul has not been disclosed, but it is supposed to be over $1,000. The matter has been kept very quiet.

THE FLOODS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Bridges, Grist Mills, Dams and Factories Washed Away.

BOSTON, July 25.—A late despatch from Great Barrington says that but one life was lost. Twenty-three bridges were gone, besides grist mills, dams and factories.

A special from Great Barrington says the greatest damage was caused in the valleys of the Green and Black Grocery rivers, the major portion of the flood passing down the latter river, causing the greater destruction on the New York side. It is said that twenty-three bridges have been destroyed and the total loss is estimated at over $500,000.

News received at Springfield, Mass., from the mill river valley last night is that C. E. Thayer's grist mill dam, and Morton's dam have given way. A part of the foundation of Hill's grist mill at Williamsburg was washed out.

Fire at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, July 25.—What threatened to be a very disastrous fire broke out about 8 o'clock this evening in some sheds in the rear of A. S. Woodburn's printing office, Elgin-street, and in a few minutes spread to the third floor of the building used as a bindery, where the official debates of the Senate and Commons for last session were laid out for building. The flames made short work of the sheds and did some damage to The Journal printing office, but nothing of consequence and the issue of the paper will not be effected. The fire was very fierce for a while and threatened to sweep away the whole block, but the firemen worked splendidly and in half an hour after they arrived had it under control. The fire was burning for some time before the alarm was struck and had made great headway before any water was thrown on it.

ICELANDIC EMIGRATION.

A Large Number Already Arrived and Many More Coming.

OTTAWA, July 25.—Mr. T. B. Anderson of Winnipeg, who is commissioned by the Government to attend to various matters connected with the Icelandic emigration to Canada, is in town. He says there are now 3500 Icelanders in Canada; that they are prosperous and satisfied, and he expects the immigration to increase. Newspapers and reports published in the Icelandic language, giving descriptions of Canada, are widely distributed in his native land, and consequently there is a great desire among the people to come to Canada. So far every emigrant to Canada has paid his fare out. The intending emigrants find it difficult to dispose of their effects in Iceland. Mr. Anderson's duty at present is to travel about the country selecting suitable sites for colonies and publishing reports which the Icelanders can read in their own language. About 1,300 Icelanders have arrived this year in Canada, and he expects more next year. He attributes the reported change of climate in Iceland to the presence of extra masses of icebergs, carried near the Island by sea currents, and which cause a periodical change.

THE FISHERIES.

A Schooner, two Seine Boats and Men Seized by a Canadian Cruiser.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 25.—A despatch from Shelburne says:—"The Gloucester fishing schooner, Annie W. Hodgson, Capt. Morrison, was brought up the harbor to-day by Capt. Knowlton of the Dominion Fishery Cruiser Advance. The facts connected with the vessel's arrest, as given by Capt. Morrison, are that during a fog yesterday the Hodgson lost a dory containing two men. After beating around in a vain search for the missing dory she at last, about daylight this morning, made Shelburne harbor and a boat was sent ashore to make enquiries, when the lost men were found. Just as the Hodgson was getting under way again she was boarded by [illegible] and there [illegible] she is now anchored. The charge made against here is violation of the customs laws in not reporting at the Custom House. Capt. Knowlton declines to give any information about the seizure.

CAUGHT SHORE-FISHING.

SOURIS, P. E. I., July 25.—The cruiser Critic yesterday captured two seine boats and seines and fourteen men belonging to the schooners Col. J. H. French and Argonaut, of Gloucester. They were caught shore-fishing off East Point, with their seines full of mackerel. The schooners left the boats and crews. The boats were towed in to Souris.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., July 25.—A telegram was received today from U.S. Consul Carleton at Souris, P.E.I., stating that the seines and boats with all the crews of the schooners Col. J. H. France and Argonaut were seized yesterday off East Point, P.E.I., by the Dominion cutter Critic. It is said the vessels' boats were close in shore with the seines set when the cutter appeared. The vessels cleared out and escaped the cutter, but before the boats could escape they were seized. It is thought the vessels will be seized before getting home as they will have to put in for assistance.

BOULANGER'S CHALLENGE.

Willing to Give the Names of those who Desired a Coup D'Etat.

LONDON, July 25.—Paris advices report that General Boulanger has gained many friends by the statement in La France newspaper that he refused to head a coup d'etat. The paper undoubtedly speaks as the ex-Minister of War's organ. It offers to publish the names of nearly a hundred French statesmen, who were in the conspiracy. The publication of the article has caused much excitement among Parisians, as it is recognized as the culmination of hostilities between General Boulanger and his enemies. It will no longer be possible for the anti-Boulangists to accuse the General of playing a bombastic part unless they accept his challenge to have the Government order him to give the names of those concerned in the alleged attempt to violate the constitution. It is the conviction that he has the proofs of his assertion at hand which is winning him fresh adherents. Here in London it must be admitted that General Boulanger is almost universally regarded as a true patriot. Many are inclined to accept as true the persistent assertion of his eulogists that he would eventually prove his disinterestedness and show that he had saved France from revolution, and if the La France article proves to be well founded it would seem as if these predictions were soon to be verified. The question of vital interest now is whether the Government will notice the challenge or ignore it. The matter is pretty sure to be brought up in the Chamber and an exciting session is looked for. There is little room for doubt that in case the matter comes up in the Deputies in the form suggested by La France and the Government fails to show good grounds for disregarding the challenge a Cabinet crisis will result. If Gen. Boulanger comes out of this affair with credit, and is recalled to the War Ministry, his seat there will have a security which it lacked before, and which will enable him to carry through the policy of revenge with which he is credited by Germany if he really desires to do so. The importance of the La France episode may thus prove to be great.

A DUEL IN PROSPECT.

PARIS, July 25.—M. Cassagnac published a flat denial of the story, that 81 generals proposed a coup-d'etat to Gen. Boulanger, and challenged La France to publish their names. La France asked General Ferron's permission to publish their names. After denying the story, M. Cassagnac printed an article, headed "Coward, Liar." The result is that M. Laur, admitting himself to be the author of the original letters referring to the matter, has challenged M. Cassagnac to fight a duel. La Justice considers the letters of too small consequence to be worth any bother, and it expresses the opinion that too great liberties have been taken in twisting words uttered by General Boulanger in the intimacy of the home circles. La France is now backing out of the affair.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH FOR JUNE.

Mortuary Returns From the Twenty-Six Canadian Cities and Towns.

In the twenty-six principal cities and towns in Canada which make monthly returns to the Department of Agriculture in Ottawa there were, in the totals, 229 more deaths in June than in May;- the returns being 1,323 for May and 1,552 for June. This runs up the mortality from the rate of 24 per 1,000 of population, per annum, in May, to over 27 per 1,000 in June; or an increase for the month of about 13 per cent.

This high rate of mortality was chiefly owing to the exceptionally high death-rate in Montreal, which gave an increase in June, as compared with May, of over 50 per cent.

This high rate in Montreal was largely due it appears to the deaths of infants in the foundling hospitals there, and Dr. Hingston, of that city, has stated that of these Ottawa had contributed largely. Whether this be so or not, this rate of "slaughter of the innocents" is a serious matter and demands investigation Whether this should be done by the authorities of the Province of Ontario or of Quebec, is a question. In this we have further evidence that a Dominion Health Department, which has been so strongly urged by the medical profession, is essential to the well-being of Canada.

In Toronto the mortality fell from 21 per 1,000 of population in May, to 17 in June. In Quebec City there was an increase in the same period, from 22 to 25 per 1,000. In Hamilton the mortality was lower in June than in May by over 50 per cent. In Halifax there was a fall of over 10 per cent. In Ottawa and St. John (N. B.), the rate was about the same in June as in May. In London there was an increase of 20 per cent., in the mortality. In Kingston there was a fall of 20 per cent. In Belleville and Guelph there was an increase, and in Hull a very great increase, in the mortality in June as compared with May.

From zymotic diseases there was an increase in the totals in June over May of about 130 per cent.; or from a total of 190 in May to 438 in June. This great increase was due to a greater mortality from diarrhœal affections, and enteric in Montreal. No deaths from [illegible] have been recorded in the Dominion during the past year ending June 30th.

In the mortality from measles there was still a further decline, there being a total of only eight deaths recorded in June, while there were fourteen in May. Again only one death was recorded from scarlet fever, which occurred in Montreal.

While from diphtheria there was an increase in the mortality in May over April, there was a decline in June to a number below that of April; there being 75, 80 and 72 deaths respectively in the three months. Of these, Montreal contributed 26, Toronto 10, Quebec 7, Ottawa 5 and Hull 12. Not more than two deaths from this cause were registered in any other place.

From diarrhœas, the total number of deaths increased from 35 in May to 319 in June. Of these 319 deaths, 243 were in Montreal, 24 in Quebec, 18 in Ottawa, and 11 in Hull; making in these four cities, 296 of the 319. It should be observed however, that it has been found that the greatest increase from these diseases usually takes place in the cities in Ontario in July rather than in June.

In the total mortality from Constitutional, Local and Developmental diseases there was a decline with the fine weather of June.—Canada Health Journal.

TWO BUSHELLS FOR ONE.

A Chance for Mr. Mowat to do Public Service.

The agricultural editor of the London Advertiser deplores the great increase of acreage in the thistle crop of that neighborhood, and says that farmers could easily "produce double the quantity of the various cereals and roots were a little more attention given to the keeping of the ground free from noxious weeds and plants." To double the quantity of cereals and roots grown in Ontario would be a big thing. It would make the farmer rich and happy, and kill commercial annexation as dead as the Grit majority of one. Why, then, does not Mr. Mowat do something toward the doubling. There exists in the statute books of Ontario the great thistle act. According to the London Advertiser this act is not worth the paper it is printed on—it is utterly ignored. Mr. Mowat has provided expensive machinery for the enforcement of the Scott Act, which is said by more than half of the community to be worse than useless; why does he not put his thistle act in force, and double Ontario's production of cereals and roots? Everybody will agree that this is something well worth doing. Come, Mr. Mowat, let us have county thistle magistrates, thistle inspectors and thistle constables; and, as you have appointed bigoted prohibitionists to enforce the Scott act, let us have violent haters of thistles, and bigoted persecutors of thistle producers, to enforce your thistle act. There is doubt about the wisdom of the Scott act; there is no doubt whatever about the wisdom of making two bushels of grain grow where now but one is grown.—Hamilton Spectator.

Forty-Eight Horses Burned.

NEW YORK, July 25.—A fire broke out at 5 o'clock this morning in the building No 43 and 48 West 13th street, in which one hundred horses were stabled, and forty-eight of them were burned to death. The building is occupied by Fleischmann's Vienna bakery, and the horses were owned by that concern. Total loss $40,000.

A Fall in Cheese.

PORT JARVIS, N. Y., July 25.—A washout occurred on the Erie Railway near Cochecton last night, carrying away the eastbound track. Twenty-one cars of cheese went down the embankment and were totally wrecked.

Drowned at Galt.

GALT, July 25.—Charlie Kinsman, aged about 12, eldest son of J. H. Kinsman, was drowned in the Grand River here this afternoon by falling off a small raft he had been using to float himself around the river. The body was recovered half an hour afterwards.

PROCLAMATIONS IN IRELAND.

DUBLIN, July 25.—A special issue of the Dublin Gazette this evening announces that the following counties have been fully proclaimed: Kings, Leitrim, Longford, Sligo, Galway, Mayo, Roscommon, Clare, Kerry, Cork, Limerick, Kilkenny, Queens, Tipperary, Waterford, Wexford, Donegal and Monaghan. The counties partially proclaimed are: Armagh, Carlow, Down, Cavan, Dublin, Kildare, Fermanagh, Londonderry, South Meath, Tyrone, West Meath and Wicklow. The following towns have also been proclaimed: Dublin, Cork, Limerick, Waterford, Londonderry, Kilkenny, Drohgheda, Belfast, Carrickfergus and Galway.

DUBLIN, July 25.—At a meeting of campaign tenants on the Vandeleur estate in West Clare on Sunday it was decided to accept the offer of a reduction of thirty per cent. in rents.

A PROTEST.

LONDON, July 25.—A protest against the Irish Crimes Act amendment (the Coercion Bill) has been issued over the signatures of the Earl of Granville and twenty-eight Liberal peers, including the Earl of Rosebery, the Marquis of Ripon, the Earl of Kimberly and Earl Spencer. The protest denounces the act as a source of lasting irritation, of hatred and mistrust of the law, and declares that the measure deprives Irishmen of individual rights and creates and stimulates the growth of secret societies.

IN THE COMMONS.

LONDON, July 25.—In the House of Commons this evening Mr. Morley asked what had happened to explain the proclamation of the whole of Ireland, since the Government has assured the House that the law was as well obeyed in some parts of Ireland as in any part of Great Britain. Mr. Balfour replied that he had no reason to change his opinion that parts of Ireland were as quiet as parts of England. What the Government had done was not to apply the whole Crimes Act to Ireland generally, but only the sub-sections dealing with rioting, unlawful assemblies, and obstruction of the public. Mr. Sexton asked whether the executive, before issuing the proclamation, distinguished the counties where it was necessary to prevent crime from those where it was necessary to punish crime. Mr. Balfour stated that in every case in which a county had been specially proclaimed the proclamation had been issued because the Government believed in the actual existence of crime or intimidation.

THE STAFF OF LIFE.

At the Guelph Agricultural College they have been making experiments on the value of bran as a food for cattle. In the latest bulletin Mr. C. C. James, Professor of Chemistry, deals with the chemical composition of bran. He says:—

"The aim and tendency of modern milling is to produce as much white flour as possible from the wheat grain. The demand of the public stimulates this, regardless of the fact that the whiteness is not a proof of richness. To produce a white flour, the germ or embryo, which is very rich in nitrogen, is removed and sold as germ flour; the husk or covering is removed and sold as bran. A description of a grain of wheat will aid in understanding the composition of bran. At one end is the brush, or hairy covering; at the other end the germ. Commencing at the outside of the grain, we find the husk or bran coating, sometimes given as three, sometimes as five, in number. These are fibrous in nature. Next comes a coating of gluten cells (the peripserm). The gluten is the nitrogeneous compound of the wheat, and is of the highest nutritive value. Within these lie enclosed the starch or flour cells (the endosperm), containing also gluten cells intermingled with them. To separate these dark fibrous coatings, to sift out by themselves the greyish germs, and to retain as much of the white starch as possible, is the aim of the miller. In doing so he leaves behind most of the gluten coating with the bran. The old milling process left behind also with the bran a considerable quantity of starch. The roller process tends to remove all this starch; the result is that most of the bran produced by the roller process is richer in nitrogen (gluten) and poorer in starch than the bran produced under the old process, and is, therefore, of a higher nutritive value."

After further consideration of the matter, illustrated by tables, Mr. James comes to the practical conclusion, among others, that:—

"Roller-process bran is, on the average, richer than old-process bran."

It naturally follows that if the bran is richer the flour is poorer. Thus we have scientific sanction of the belief that the white loaf made from the snowy flour, now so much in demand, is by no means so nourishing as the old fashioned loaf made from old process flour. The millers must supply what their customers require, but, apart from the look of the the thing, the old loaf, with all the goodness of the wheat in it, was preferable to the rather dry and flavorless and less nutritious bread with a larger proportion of starch and less gluten. Neither the showy hue nor the fact that the baker can make more loaves from this patent flour, which takes up a greater weight of water, can quite compensate the consumer for the change.

THE London Advertiser says:—

"Mr. Blake's opinion is well known. It is that no question within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Local Legislature ought to be made the subject of revision by the Ministers of the Crown at Ottawa It is wholly inconsistent with parliamentary government that the measures which the Local Government may carry within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature should be subject to review by the Federal Ministry."

A man's opinion is best known from his acts. When Mr. Blake was Minister of Justice he interfered far more frequently than the Conservatives with Provincial legislation, even in cases within the exclusive jurisdiction of Provincial Legislatures. Nor was this peculiar to Mr. Blake, for other Reform Ministers of Justice did the same. By our Constitution the Dominion authorities have the power to review all Provincial legislation, and to veto it if deemed expedient for the good of the whole country, being responsible to the people for the manner in which they use the power. This right of veto was reserved with the approval of the leading statesmen of both parties at the time of Confederation. If Mr. Blake and other Reform leaders object to this part of our Constitution, they should have endeavored to amend it when they were in office. They then thought it was a wholesome power for them to use with considerable freedom.

THE London Advertiser is our authority for supposing that the extirpation of the thistle would make two bushells of grain grow where one grows now. If the Farmers' Institutes have any time to spare from their political labours why do not they move Mr. Mowat to enforce his Thistle Act, which he allows to remain a dead letter. Doubling their grain crop would benefit Canadian farmers more than giving them free access for their wheat to the United States markets where the price is 10 cents less than in Canada.

THE Commercial Annexationists will persist in maintaining that the advocates of the N. P. must be quite as hostile to the Mother Country as the advocates of the proposed American zollverein. A son who has grown to a man's estate is justified in setting up for himself, living his own life and providing for his family. But he would not show much filial affection or gratitude if he formed a partnership with his father's business rival in order to assist in the opposition to his parent. This is just the difference.

WHAT IT MEANS.

Commercial Union a Great Loss to the People of Canada.

The Toronto Globe in 1880 thus ably discribed the result of Commercial Union. Perhaps our contemporary will now oblige us with its promised facts and figures. The Globe said:—

"The Commercial Union question must be considered first as a Canadian, then as a British question. We assert unhesitatingly that even with British consent, and assuming for the moment that the Zollverein would not mean political extinction, which its authors intend it to bring about, Commercial Union with the United States, based on a discriminating tariff against the remainder of the world, would be a great loss to us. We have already supported this assertion with facts and figures, and are prepared to go still more deeply into the subject if it be necessary."

The Globe then expressed its views as follows:—

"But the discussion concerning the zollvereln cannot be carried on in cold blood, as though only material considerations were at stake, because it is palpable to the meanest understanding that the design of the Montreal agitators is to bring about annexation. In the first place it is evident that no English statesman could hold office for an hour who should consent to let Canada discriminate against British goods, while Great Britain remained charged with the defence of the Dominion. Separation from the Empire is therefore plainly contemplated by the Montreal agitators, and it is no less clear that incorporation with the United States is regarded by them as the certain result of carrying out their commercial programme. First in the order of forces that will [illegible] success of the zollverein agitation [illegible] annual [illegible] who fears that the people of the Dominion fear the task of building up a great nation on the continent measures the spirit of his own weakness. Without animosity against their neighbours, Canadians will ever refuse to surrender the privileges of a separate existence.

"Treating the question of a zollverein with the United States as a purely economical one, nothing can be more certain than the present agitation in Montreal is opposed to the merely material interests of Canada. The people of the Dominion are asked to separate themselves commercially from the world by the same act which would join them commercially to the United States. They are asked to forego the benefit obtained by purchasing cheaply in the markets to which the bulk of their produce is sent, and to which it must continue to go.

"Absolute free trade with the United States would be no compensation for suppression of trade with the rest of the world."

THE RING WE ARE TO JOIN.

The Chicago Tribune thinks that the Board of Trade could so amend its rules as to put an end to much of the gambling in staples which is doing serious injury to American trades. If anything in that direction can be done it should be done at once. Gambling in stocks is bad enough, ruining many of those who engage in it and creating or encouraging a taste for gambling amongst all classes. But it is not as injurious to the country as gambling in breadstuffs, provisions or cotton, as now carried on.—Toronto Globe (Annexationist.)

A SURPLUS STOCK.

The Chicago Canadian-American has it on the authority of an official of the Deering company, of Chicago, that that concern would, under a 17 per cent. tariff, send 2,500 of its machines into Canada. The company has, the official says, a surplus stock, and would not mind a little sacrifice to get the surplus worked off on the Canadian market, where they could undersell every Canadian manufacturer and carry ruin to Canadian makers of agricultural machinery. When Mr. Wiman will have removed the trade barrier the Deerings and McCormicks will do this, and crush out the Canadian small fry. The Deerings and McCormicks have already crushed out the small fry of the United States. The Wentworth farmer will not be able to sell his produce to the employes of the Deerings and McCormicks. The "home" market cannot be stretched that far.—Hamilton Spectator.

JAY GOULD'S LIEUTENANT.

What did Erastus Wiman do when he secured control of the Montreal and Dominion telegraph companies? Did he not hand them over to Jay Gould, an American capitalist? Is the man who schemed to sell out Canadian interests to foreigners, and succeeded in his designs, the proper party to dole out advice to Canadians? Let the stock holders of the Montreal and Dominion telegraph companies answer this last question.—Chicago Canadian-American.

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfils a single class of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc.

"There, love," he said, "don't fret; I feel quite myself again. I fear I made a fool of myself. I haven't learned to bear misfortune and dishonor as I should yet, and, like Job, I felt as though God had forsaken us. But, as I said, his will be done. What is the next move, I wonder? Ah! we shall soon know, for here comes our friend Frank Muller."

"I am glad to see that you have recovered, uncle," said Muller, politely, "and I am sorry to have to tell you that the house is beyond help. Believe me, if I knew who fired it I would shoot him. It was not my wish or intention that the property should be destroyed."

The old man merely bowed his head and made no answer. His fiery spirit seemed to be crushed out of him.

"What is it your pleasure that we should do, sir?" said Bessie at last. "Perhaps, now that we are ruined, you will allow us to go to Natal, which, I suppose, is still an English country?"

"Yes, Miss Bessie, Natal is still English, for the present; soon it will be Dutch; but I am sorry that I cannot let you go there now. My orders are to keep you both prisoners and to try your uncle by court martial. The wagon house," he went on, quickly, "with the two little rooms on each side of it, has not been touched by the fire. I will have them made ready for you, and as soon as the heat is less you can go there;" and, turning to the men who had followed him, he gave some rapid orders, which two of them departed to carry out.

Still the old man made no comment; he did not even seem indignant or surprised; but poor Bessie was utterly prostrated and stood helpless, not knowing what to say to this terrible, remorseless man, who stood so calm and unmoved there before them.

Frank Muller paused a while to think, stroking his beard as he did so, then turned again and addressed the two remaining men behind him.

"You will keep guard over the prisoner," indicating Silas Croft, "and suffer none to communicate with him by word or sign. As soon as it is ready you will place him in the little room to the left of the wagon house, and see that he is supplied with all he wants. If he escapes, or converses, or is ill treated, I will hold you responsible. Do you understand?"

"Yah, meinheer," was the answer.

"Very good; be careful you do not forget. And now, Miss Bessie, I shall be glad if you can give me a word alone"——

"No," said Bessie; "no, I will not leave my uncle."

"I fear you will have to do that," he said, with his cold smile. "I beg you to think again. It will be very much to your advantage to speak to me, and to your uncle's advantage also. I should advise you to come."

Bessie hesitated. She hated and mistrusted the man, as she had good reason to do, and feared to trust herself alone with him.

While she hesitated the two Boers under whose watch and ward Muller had placed her uncle came and stood between him and her, cutting her off from him. Muller turned and walked a few paces—ten or so—to the right, and in desperation she followed him. He halted behind a bushy orange tree of some eight years' growth. Overtaking him, she stood silent waiting for him to begin. They were quite close to the others, but the roaring of the flames of the burning house was still sufficiently loud to have drowned a much more audible conversation than theirs.

"What is it you have to say to me?" she said at length, pressing her hand against her heart to still its beating. Her woman's instinct told her what was coming and she was trying to nerve herself to meet it.

"Miss Bessie, he said slowly, "it is this. For years I have loved you and wanted to marry you. I again ask you to be my wife."

"Mr. Frank Muller," she answered, her spirit rising to the occasion, "I thank you for your offer, and the only answer that I can give you is that I once and for all decline it."

"Think," he said, "I love you as women are not often loved. You are always in my mind by day and by night, too. Everything I do, every step I go up the ladder, I have said and say to myself, 'I am doing it for Bessie Croft, whom I mean to marry.' Things have changed in this country. The rebellion has been successful. It was I who gave the casting vote for it that I might win you. I am now a great man and shall one day be a greater. You will be great with me. Think what you say."

"I have thought, and I will not marry you. You dare to come and ask me to marry you over the ashes of my home, out of which you have dragged me and my poor old uncle! I hate you, I tell you, and I will not marry you! I had rather marry a Kaffir than marry you, Frank Muller, however great you may be."

He smiled. "Is it because of the Englishman Niel that you will not marry me? He is dead. It is useless to cling to a dead man."

"Dead or alive, I love him with all my heart; and if he is dead, it is at the hands of your people, and his blood rises up between us."

"His blood has sunk down into the sand. He is dead, and I am glad that he is dead. Once more, is that your last word?"

"It is."

"Very good. Then I tell you that you shall marry me or"——

"Or what?"

"Or your uncle, the old man you love so much, shall die!"

"What do you mean?" she said, in a choked voice.

"What I say; no more and no less. Do you think that I will let one old man's life stand between me and my desire? Never. If you will not marry me, Silas Croft shall be put upon his trial for attempted murder and for treason within an hour from this. Within an hour and a half he shall be condemned to die, and to-morrow at dawn he shall die, by warrant under my hand. I am commandant here, with power of life and death, and I tell you that he shall certainly die—and his blood will be on your head."

Bessie grasped at the tree for support.

"You dare not," she said; "you dare not murder an innocent old man."

"Dare not!" he answered; "you must understand me very ill, Bessie Croft, when you talk of what I dare not do for you. There is nothing," he added, with a thrill of his rich voice, "that I dare not do to gain you. Listen; promise to marry me to-morrow morning. I will get a clergyman here from Wakkerstroom, and your uncle shall go free as air, though he is a traitor to the land, and though he has tried to shoot a burgher after the declaration of peace. Refuse, and he dies. Choose now."

"I have chosen," she answered with passion. "Frank Muller, perjured traitor—yes, murderer that you are, I will not marry you!"

"Very good, very good, Bessie; as you will. But now one more thing. You shall not say that I have not warned you. If you persist in this your uncle shall die, but you shall not escape me. You will not marry me? Well, even in this country, where I can do most things, I cannot force you to do that. But I can force you to be my wife in all but the name without marriage; and this, when your uncle is still in his bloody grave, I will do. You shall have one more chance after the trial, and one only. If you refuse he shall die, and then, after his death, I shall take you away by force, and in a week's time you will be glad enough to marry me to cover up your shame, my pretty!"

"You are a devil, Frank Muller, a wicked devil; but I will not be frightened into dishonor by you. I had rather kill myself. I trust to God to help me. I will have nothing to do with you;" and she put her hands before her face and burst into tears.

"You look lovely when you weep," he said, with a laugh; "to-morrow I shall be able to kiss away your tears. As you will. Here, you!" he shouted to some men, who could be seen watching the progress of the dying fire, "come here."

Some of the men obeyed, and he proceeded to give instructions in the same terms that he had given to the other two men who were watching old Silas, ordering Bessie to be instantly incarcerated in the corresponding little room on the other side of the wagon house, and kept strictly from all communication with the outside world, adding, however, these words:

"Bid the burghers assemble in the wagon house for the trial of the Englishman, Silas Croft, for treason against the state and attempted murder of one of the burghers of the state in the execution of the commands of the triumvirate."

The two men advanced and seized Bessie by both arms. Then, faint and overpowered, she was led through the little plantation, over a gap in the garden wall, down past the scorched syringa trees that lined the roadway that ran along the hillside at the back of the still burning house, till they reached the wagon house with the two little rooms which served respectively as a store and harness room. She was then thrust into the store room, which was half full of loose potatoes and mealies in sacks, and the door locked upon her.

There was no window to this room, and the only light in it was such as found its way through the chinks of the door and an air hole in the masonry of the back wall. She [illegible] was of escape, but she soon realized that that was a practical impossibility. The stout, yellow wood door was locked upon her, and a sentry stood before it. She rose and looked through the air hole in the rear wall, but there another sentry was posted. Then she turned her attention to the side wall that divided the room from the wagon house. It was built of fourteen inch green brickwork, and had cracked from the shrinkage of the bricks, so that she could hear anything that went on in the wagon house, and even see anybody who might be moving about in it. But it was far too strong for her to hope to be able to break through, and even if she did, it would be useless, for there were armed men there also. Besides how could she run away and leave her [illegible] uncle to his fate?

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other doings which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

NO HOSTILITY.

There is no hostility in the east, to Manitoba; quite the contrary, but the first duty owed by us all is obedience to the constitution. No other Province claims a right to charter a railway to a foreign frontier; and if the constitution may be violated in one particular so it might in another.—Monetary Times.

OUR PROPOSED PARTNERS.

England was led to encourage wheat growing in India because American speculators insisted on cornering the cereal and asking exorbitant prices when they could. A repetition of such tactics in the cotton market will force England to encourage some of her colonies to raise more cotton. The United States is big enough to raise wheat and cotton for the whole world, but a few avaricious middle-men will not permit her to supply the nations without they can leech the profits. So every time that a corner of this sort goes to pieces, and the sharpers are caught by the falling ruins, the American people may well rejoice.—Buffalo Express.

Bac-kac-he.

What does that spell? Why, "backache," of course, though you would not suspect it at the first glance. It spells what hundreds and thousands of women are suffering from every day of their lives, but what they need not suffer from, if they knew the virtues of Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." All those "dragging down" pains and sensations of nausea and weakness, peculiar to women, can be cured by this same boon to womankind. It is almost magical in its results.

Smallpox at Havana.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

TUESDAY, JULY 26, 1887.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Band.

The band will give an open air concert in the Horticultural Gardens this evening.

Fined.

On Monday George Benton was fined $1 and costs for depositing nuisance near the quarry.

The Review.

Citizens leaving town on their holidays can have the REVIEW sent to them for the small sum of 10 cents a week.

St. John's S. S. Excursion.

The annual picnic of St. John's Sunday School will be held at Sturgeon Point on Wednesday next the 27th of July Tickets for Adults 75 cents, Children 40 cents. 2d20

County Scott Act.

H. Gordon was summoned before the County Police Magistrate on Monday on the charge of committing an infraction of the Scott Act on July 15th. A fine of $50 was imposed.

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

Excursion.

The Firemen's excursion to Grimsby Park has been postponed from July 28th to Thursday, August 4th, on account of the railway being unable to furnish them with cars on the first mentioned date.

Real Estate.

On Saturday Mr. George Brown's house and lot, Elizabeth street, Ashburnham, was sold at the Stewart House to Mr. A. Fitzgerald, for the sum of $2,475. Mr. Chas. Stapleton conducted the sale.

A PAIR of Ladies' Button Boots and a Bottle of Good Polish for 80 cts. at KIDD'S

Sale.

On Saturday at the Stewart House Mr Chas. Stapleton sold lot 29 in the 6th concession of Otonabee, and the east half of lot 29 in the 7th concession, known as the McDonald property, to Mr. Melville Millar, for the sum of $6,375.

Real Estate.

Remember the auction sale of real estate belonging to J. W. Flavelle, Esq., on the premises on Queen street, on Wednesday July 27th, at 2.30 p. m. Also at the same time and place a splendid new phaeton, &c., &c. The property must positively be sold. See large posters for further particulars. 2d20

Over Three Thousand.

During the last three months there have been fifty-two town cases heard at the Police Court, in which the fines imposed amounted to $3,450. Together with this there were some county cases from the West Riding, the fines in which totaled $400 or $3,850 altogether. The west part of the county is under the supervision of Inspector Cochrane.

KIDD has a line of Ladies' Kid Boots that he sells below wholesale prices, and no humbugging about it.

Scott Act.

At the Police Police Court this morning the following cases were heard:—Cochrane vs. Cavanagh, Cochrane vs. Garvey, Cochrane vs. Morrow, Cochrane vs. Snowden, Cochrane vs. Pope, Cochrane vs. Elliott & Tierney, Cochrane vs. Rush & Lithgow. A hundred dollars and costs was imposed in each of the cases except in those of Cochrane vs. Rush & Lithgow, in which $50 and costs were imposed.

Camping Parties.

The Port Hope Times says:—"Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Salter, with his sons, went to Stoney Lake on Saturday morning. Mr. Silas Williams his wife; Messrs. Stanley Paterson, —— Barber, C. Peplow and John Johnston, and Miss L. Choate; Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Wickett, two brothers of Mr. Wickett, Mrs. Wickett's sister and Mr. Luke Martin, all went out this morning, also bound for Stoney Lake. This camping ground is fast becoming a favorite. On Wednesday morning, still another party will go out, composed of Mr. and Mrs. T. Neelands and daughter, Dr. Might, Mr. R. Dickson and the two Misses Dicksons, Miss M. Riley and Mr. T. Cosgrove. On Wednesday, a party bound for the Muskoka lakes w leave town."

Victoria Rifles' Band.

Referring to the visit of this band to Boston last year, the Boston Herald speaks as follows:—"The music by the Victoria Rifles' Band is very fine indeed. The band comprises some forty-five pieces, and its members are all accomplished musicians. It is a great pleasure to sit in the gallery of Washington Hall and look down at the moving spectacle on the floor of the hall, while listening to the music floating upward from the band stand in the centre. * * * General C. B. Norton, Secretary of the Foreign Exhibition Association, was serenaded last evening at the Hotel Vendome by the Victoria Rifles' Band of Montreal, forty-five pieces. A grand march was played on the way from the exhibition building to the hotel, and two selections were played after arrival. General Norton responded as follows:—'I thank you, gentlemen, in the name of our association, for the admirable music you have given us during our exhibition, and I wish to thank you personally for the compliment you have paid me this evening. I hope to see you again in Boston soon, and wish you a very pleasant voyage on your journey home.' The band played another selection, after which the members were invited to a spread at the Hotel Vendome by General Norton." 1d21

Robbed.

The Elma correspondent of the Listowel Banner writes as follows in the issue of that paper of July 22nd:—"As W. W. Miller, of Peterborough, who is at present on a visit to his uncle, Mr. J. R. Lawrence, was driving some young cattle up a back lane, on Wednesday night, and when near the woods, three ruffians sprang from a corner of the fence and overpowered him, and while one sat on him the other two rifled his pockets and took four dollars, and said if he made any alarm they would put a bullet through him. Then as they let him go he sprang to his feet and called them 'three cowardly brutes,' when one turned and kicked him in the stomach, then ran away. When the men first sprang at him he was walking with his hands in his pockets, and suspecting at once what their intentions were, he grasped the money that was in his pocket, withdrawing it and held it in his hand, so that they failed to get it and [illegible] his pockets. In the scuffle that ensued before they overpowered him, his watch and chain fell on the ground, so they did not get that either. They have a strong suspicion of whom the parties are."

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

Personal.

Mr. W. Armstrong, who has been an employee of the City Clothing Store for the past seven years, left town on Monday evening to assume a position in Radford Bro. & Co.'s wholesale gent's furnishing house, Montreal. A large number of his friends saw him off at the station.

Dr. G. A. Bingham, Prof. in Trinity Medical School, Toronto, has returned to the city after spending a few days with his sister, Mrs. Ferguson of High Park.

Mr. J. O'Meara and family, who have been on a visit to Caledonia Springs, Prescott County, for the past five weeks, have returned home.

There will be an unusually interesting Wednesday night service in the George Street Methodist Church this week, as on that occasion the many friends of Mr. J. W. Flavelle will have an opportunity of bidding him a public farewell, in view of his departure for Toronto. 2d21

Mr. R. Nier, of Rochester, is in town paying a visit to Mr. Tierney, of the firm of Elliott & Tierney.

Probable Change.

The Port Hope Times says:—"Consequent on their resolve to stable no engines at Port Hope, the Grand Trunk authorities have the rearrangement of the time table of the Midland division under consideration. One change comes into effect to-day. The local train on the main line running from Cobourg to Toronto in the morning and return at night, via Port Hope. At present there are three passenger trains run out of and three come into Port Hope. Under the new arrangement there will be only the local train as given above and the mixed that comes in about nine o'clock and goes out at 10.45 a.m. The trains that by this plan are taken off the Midland will be put on the Grand Junction and run from Bellville, to Toronto, via Peterborough. At least this is the arrangement that is spoken of as decided upon."

Bridge Works

Work is in progress at the "Romaine brick factory" in transferring it into a suitable place for the manufacture of bridges. The immense quantity of brick used in the construction of the kilns is being removed. Some of the brick is being used in building walls, some will be sold and the debris will be used to grade the siding which is to be run in from the Canadian Pacific railway. The frame work of the building is being strengthened in various ways.

Canton Montreal.

A letter received from Montreal states that the Montreal Canton are hard at work getting ready, and hope to be in admirable form to participate in the Exhibition Drill at the Driving Park on the 10th of August. Capt. Briggs requests the committee to have the prettiest girl in Peterborough to present the banner to Canton Montreal.

At Work.

The Oddfellows Refreshment Committee started their rounds yesterday to collect the slips from the friends of the order who will assist in providing provisions to entertain Cantons at the rink in August. So far they have met with great success.

Advance Agent.

Mr. Ruf. Stevenson has gone to the lake to select a site for spreading the tents prepartory to the arrival of a large camping party.

Camping Party.

A camping party consisting of Messrs. F. G. Cox, F. Kingan, G. V. Clementi, A. Mercer and H. S. Kirby, went up to the lake this morning.

Good Business.

The Lakefield line on the Grand Trunk railway is doing a big business in the summer travel trade. Every train is loaded with campers and campers supplies.

Cheese Boxes.

Mr. Robt. Bickle & Son are about to open a factory for the manufacture of cheese boxes in Ashburnham. This firm has already turned out some forty thousand boxes at their factory near Port Hope.

Nearly Time.

We are informed that some of the deputy-returning officers at the last Provincial elections have not yet been paid for their services. Surely it is nearly time they were paid, as the provincial elections were held seven months ago.

H. S. GRIFFIN & Co. are always on the outlook for bargains. This week they bought several lines of goods at half price. Spot cash at this season can procure startling value. Another line of 12½ cent. prints for 7½. Ladies' sun hats, 20 cents, sailors in childrens, 20 cents. Cromptons $1.00 corsets for 50 cents, etc., etc., etc. 2d21 1w29

Fell From a Bridge and Killed

OTTAWA, July 23.—John Bigham was working on the Canadian Pacific Railway short line bridge at Merrickville yesterday, and slipping from the iron work, he fell on his head, striking the stone work. Death resulted in half an hour.

A Quebec Act Disallowed.

OTTAWA, July 25.—His Excellency the Governor-General has, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, disallowed the Act 49 Vic., chap. 98, of the Quebec Legislature, passed in 1886, incorporating the Lieutenant-Governor and giving him certain powers, amongst them the right to sue and be sued. The ground of disallowance [illegible] on which a similar Act a short time ago, namely, that it is ultra vires for the Provincial Legislature to add or take from the powers of the Lieutenant-Governors, who are Dominion officers in the same sense that the Governor-General is an Imperial officer.

COBOURG.

SKATING RINK BURNED.—The curling and skating rink, a large wooden structure on James street, was burned early on Sunday morning. A frame dwelling, occupied by Mr Hart, was also burned. The rink buildings originally cost $5,000, and were insured for $2,500. The other building was not insured.

ATTEMPTED BURGLARY.—At an early hour on Monday morning Mr. Carruthers, who occupies the south portion of what is known as the Rush terrace, was awakened from his sleep by hearing his bedroom door open. He reached out his hand to close the door when it came in contact with the leg of a man. A lively run then took place down stairs between the two, but the would-be burglar came out ahead by escaping through a back window, leading to which a plank had been placed to help him in his escape.—Sentinel-Star.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 27, 1887.

A BREACH OF ETIQUETTE.

LONDON, July 26.—Lord Charles Beresford, Junior Lord of the Admiralty, has resigned. He has been requested to withdraw his resignation. The cause for the resignation was a minor breach of etiquette at Spithead during the naval review last [illegible] Lord Charles from the royal yacht was converted into a public signal.

The breach of etiquette is thus described: While the Queen was receiving the captains of the fleet in the saloon of the royal yacht Albert and Victoria, Lord Charles Beresford, who was on the yacht, signalled to the Enchantress, on board which his wife was, the following message:—"Tell Lady Charles to go immediately aboard the yacht Lancashire Witch, where I will join her."

The captain of the Enchantress, when the signal was given, thought, of course, it was a special royal command, but as the message was slowly spelled out he became greatly enraged. He had, however, to smother his feelings, not daring to report Lord Charles in view of his position as a Lord of the Admiralty. The captain could not refrain, however, from complaining privately to his friends, and in this way a reporter of the Times learned of the incident. The result was the publication of the whole story in Monday's issue. Lord Charles then had no option but to resign.

The permanent officials of the Admiralty are, it is said, delighted over the position in which the "Reformer Beresford" is placed by the affair.

THE LORD MAYOR'S BANQUET.

International Laws Should Banish Useless Armaments.

LONDON, July 26.—The Lord Mayor gave a banquet last evening to the gentlemen engaged in the conference on the laws of nations and international law. Among the guests present were Minister Phelps, Mr. David Dudley Field, Senator Hawley, Mr. Simon Cameron and Mr. Wirt Dexter. The Mayor proposed "The jurists of all nations," to which Mr. Field responded for Americans. Referring to the naval review at Spithead, Mr. Field wondered what must be the state of public law that needed the maintenance of such a vast armament. If half the statesmanship, philanthropy and literature that is brought to bear on other questions were applied to the question of public law, these armaments would soon vanish. He thought the Alabama arbitration reflected more credit on England than all her martial victories.

Blaine and Annexation.

CHICAGO, July 26.—A special cable from Bridge of Earne to the News says: G. D. Peters, the celebrated Moorgate ironmonger, called at Kilgraston to day and had a brief chat with Mr. Blaine. Mr. Peters has heavy land and other interests in Canada, though he is an Englishman. The prospective annexation of Canada to the United States is his hobby. He was anxious to get Mr. Blaine's views on the subject, but Mr. Blaine was extremly shy. He listened attentively till Mr. Peters was through, and then ended the interview in his characteristic way. "It is the old story," said he "we don't need Canada and we don't want her. Yes, I have no doubt she would like to join; but it's just as I asked Sir John Macdonald once, 'What are you going to give us in return for what we give you,'" Mr. Peters couldn't answer this any more than Sir John Macdonald, so the matter dropped.

Damages by O'Brien Riots.

KINGSTON, Ont., 26.—The City Council last night ordered the payment of the account of the Freeman for damage done to its offices by the mob at the time of William O'Brien's visit to this city. It was shown that the Corporation was not liable, but the Aldermen felt that, for the protection of citizens against menacing mobs, that the damages done should be made good by the city.

Rumored Knighthood.

TORONTO, July 26.—It is rumored that Hon. Mr. Mowat will be knighted in England. Another report is that the honor was declined by Dr. Daniel Wilson. Mr. Mowat, so his friends say, would certainly accept it if tendered.

A UNITED STATES VIEW.

A New York Paper's Opinion of the Fishery Seizures.

NEW YORK, July 26.—The Tribune says:—"The Canadians are at their old tricks. They have seized an American fishing schooner which was hunting for two men lost in a dory, and they have captured two seine boats with their crews. It is alleged that these boats were within the three mile limit, but the most experienced of fishers say it is a very difficult matter to determine whether or not vessels are within that limit. If the boats were beyond that limit the Canadians would of course dispute the fact, and they appear to have matters their own way. Congress gave the President full power to protect American fishermen, but he has not shown any inclination to make use of it. The judicious instruction given to the American fleet have deprived Canadian officials of opportunities for seizing vessels for technical violations of the customs laws and conducting arbitrary prosecutions for forfeiture, when there was no proof of actual intention to defraud the Government, or evade the custom laws. In order to harrass the American fishing interests, these officials will have to take advantage of stress of weather and swoop down upon vessels that are seeking shelter in a harbor in accordance with treaty rights. This was done in numerous instances last year. Practically, the American fishing fleet does not enjoy in Canadian ports commercial priveleges which were proclaimed by Great Britain and the United States in 1830. The obligations of that international compact have been faithfully kept on one side. Canadian vessels can enter American ports freely, purchase bait and supplies of all kinds, recruit their crews and incur no risk of being seized, fined or confiscated for technical evasions of the custom's regulations. American vessels do not have the same priveleges in Canadian waters, and in order to ply their trade in peace they are forced to remain outside, and only to seek shelter in circumstances of sheer necessity."

THE HODGSON SEIZURE.

Escorted to Sea Before What Her Captain has to Say.

MONTREAL, July 26.—A special from Halifax to the Star to-day says:—The seizure or attempted seizure of three American poachers is a prompt reply to the Opposition editorial of the last week, which alleged that the Yankee poachers were given full swing in Canadian waters. Consul-General Phelan and Rear Admiral Luce, now in this city, are very much surprised at the sudden manner in which the Canadian cruisers swooped down on the poachers and have no explanation to give pending further details. Despatches from Shelburne indicate that last week the Gloucester schooner Annie W. Hodgson was in that port seining. She was escorted to sea by the cruiser Advance, and when five miles off shore the Hodgson's skipper told Capt. Knowlton, of the cruiser, that he was bound straight for the banks. When the cruisers boat was patroling Shelburne harbor, in a fog, yesterday morning, this same vessel was discovered at anchor. As soon as Capt. Knowlton was seen the Yankee crowded on all sail and attempted to escape to sea, but finding the cutters boat gaining on him, he rounded to, and when boarded Captain Knowlton found a tub of fresh fish on board. Captain Knowlton is convinced the Hodgson was dodging around for that, and detained the vessel for not reporting at the Customs.

Captain Morrison told the following story when boarded: "I am out from Gloucester fortnight on a fishing trip. On Sunday morning I was anchored in eight fathoms of water, fourteen miles south-south-east of Shelburne light. During the morning three dories left the schooner to visit trawls. Two of them returned shortly afterwards, but the third strayed from the schooner in the fog. There was another vessel lying to the west-north-west of me, three miles, and when the fog lifted, about 2 o'clock p. m., I ran up to her and found that my missing men had boarded her. I then ran back to my old anchor ground in the hope that the men would find their way back to us. As it set in thick again towards night I determined to run into Shelburne harbor to see if my men, having, perhaps, heard the fog whistle, might not have got safely into the harbor. We dropped anchor inside of the light this morning, and sent a dory ashore to see if the men had arrived. They found that they had, and the two dories returned to the schooner together this morning with the fish that the lost men had taken yesterday from the trawls. These are the fish now on my deck uncleaned."

"You were proceeding to sea when the cutter's boat boarded you?"

"Yes."

"Had you reported your vessel?"

"No; because it was a long way to the Customs house, and I was anxious to get back to my trawls."

"You knew it was a breach of our laws to leave port without reporting?"

"Yes, I did."

"Did you know the cutter was in port?"

"I heard she was."

This was all the information the captain had to offer. He denied being in for bait either last week or now, and says he has squid bait enough to do him for the trip. His negligence is particularly inexcusable because he could have reported either at Sandy Point, where a Customs officer has lately been appointed, or he could have done so on board the Advance.

The Cruisers in Pursuit.

OTTAWA, July 26.—The Department of Fisheries has received confirmation of the seizure of the American fishery boats and schooner, but no fuller particulars than have been already published. It is confidently expected that the two schooners, the French and the Argonaut, which escaped at the time their boats were caught seining, will be captured. The cruisers are after them, and as they are very short handed they will probably be forced to put into some port for help.

Water for the Farm.

OTTAWA, July 26.—The Government experimental farm, situated near the city, will in future be supplied with water from the Ottawa water works. The extension of the privilege to the farm will cost $10,000, half of which outlay the Government will foot.

STORY OF A FEARFUL BUTCHERY.

Bolivian Troops Massacred and Mutilated by Indians.

PANAMA, July 16.—The Star and Herald says: "We have previously reported that a picket of soldiers sent to Beni, a province of Bolivia, by the La Paz authorities, had been cut off by the Indians, and now some further particulars are at hand. The soldiers had packed their rifles in a cart drawn by Indians. They were suddenly attacked, and all were killed with the exception of those who succeeded in reaching a small chapel. Here they defended themselves for three days and finally, when their ammunition was exhausted, endeavored to escape during the night, but were overtaken, clubbed to death and then quartered. On receiving particulars of this hecatomb the Prefect sent seven missionaries to the Indians to endeavor to bring them to terms. Of these seven, two joined them, four were allowed to return after they had sworn to assist the insurrectionary cause, whilst the seven were barbarously murdered. One leg was tied to the tail of a horse and the other leg to the tail of another, and the horses were flogged until they started in opposite directions, litterally tearing the man in halves. This cruelty was practised on him because he endeavored to persuade the Indians to become peaceable, and told them they had no chance against the well armed whites. Subsequently the Indians burned down some valuable plantations, captured some cattle, and overturned a number of launches with people and merchandize in them. The prefect of Beni has collected about 150 men and intends to attack them. The inhabitants of Loreto, who are separated from the rebels by the Mamora river, are preparing to resist should they be attacked. Telegraphic communication cannot be kept up with La Paz, owing to the Indians having a superstitious awe of the posts and wires, which they cut down and destroy whenever they have an opportunity.

LONDON, July 26.—A diplomatic authority says:—It will be best not to regard the Russo-English agreement to an Afghan frontier as a permanent settlement until the Ameer has been heard from. It is said on good Central Asian authority that the chances are all against Abdurrahman accepting the decision arrived at, and the likelihood is that his troops will occupy the places ceded to Russia, and refuse to give them up, whereupon a good deal of fat will be in the fire.

IRISH NATIONAL LEAGUE.

CORK, July 26.—The Mayor presided at a public meeting of the National League last night. In opening he said the cause of Ireland would proceed despite coercion, and if the league was unable to hold public meetings it would meet in private. Great enthusiasm was manifested during the meeting, with which the police made no attempt to interfere.

AMERICAN MISTRUST.

LONDON, July 26.—The Times, commenting on Attorney-General Garland's opinion in reference to the Alien Act, says: "Our chief surprise at this recent law is the mistrust it evinces of the acclimating power of America, which might have been supposed to be too sure of her ability to absorb foreign elements to compel them to begin by offering a reluctant allegiance."

STORIES OF STANLEY'S DEATH.

LONDON, July 26.—Those who know Africa unite in discrediting the story of Stanley's death; but popular feeling is that there is likely to be something in the rumor. A strange part of it is that a report of Stanley's death was being whispered about in city circles on Wednesday, whereas Reuter's dispatch from St. Thomas containing the statement did not reach London until Thursday. It is recalled, with an indefinable sense of mystery, that on three previous occasions fatalities in Africa have been known somehow in the city of London before the press news arrived in the regular channels—the death of the Prince Imperial in 1870, the shooting of James Carey in 1883, and the death of Gen. Gordon in 1885. How the intelligence is thus obtained is a secret, and this is probably at the bottom of the fear now that, despite all the maps and the explanations of African experts, there is something in the report.

Mr. BALFOUR'S DEFENCE.

LONDON, July 26.—Mr. Balfour in reply to questions in the House of Commons this afternoon, defended the proclaiming under the Crimes Act of counties in Ireland which are in a partially disturbed state. He said that is was true that the public statistics of crime did not indicate a serious state of things in Ireland, but he reminded the House that besides the recorded outrages the Government were guided by other information furnished by responsibly officers. The Government could not admit, however, that the constitutional liberties of any one were taken away by the proclaiming of the counties. (Cries of "Oh!" "Oh," and cheers.)

ENGLAND AND TURKEY.

LONDON, July 26.—Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, the negotiator of the unsuccessful Anglo-Turkish Convention for the future administration of affairs in Egypt, said in an interview in Paris yesterday, that he did not think the lapse of time would interfere with the relations between England and Turkey. This may be true, but it seems inconceivable that England can retain the same relations with the Sultan's Government as before the Porte repudiated an all but consumated agreement, at the behest of two powers not over friendly to Great Britain in any circumstances, and in pursuance of their European policy positively hostile to her.

PRESERVING THEIR MEMORY.

THE Ottawa Free Press has discovered grounds for another serious charge against the Dominion Government. The name of Cartwright post office in West Durham has been changed to Blackstock, and the Ottawa organ says that the "ministry have resolved that the names of the leaders of the Opposition shall not even be commemorated by having post offices named after them." This charge is of such a serious nature that the friends of the Government will be pleased to know that it is not true, because if it were, nothing short of a rebellion would [illegible] the friends of the valiant leaders of the Opposition. There is a post office in Canada named after Sir Richard and its name has not been changed; the post office in West Durham, (which is in Cartwright township) was not named after Sir Richard. The change could not therefore have been made to "punish" Sir Richard, as the Free Press believes, and if it had the punishment would have been altogether inadequate for the enormity of his misdeeds. By all means let the leaders of the Opposition be commemorated by naming post offices after them, as in Sir Richard's case, or townships, as Mr. Mowat did for Mr. Mills, for unless they are remembered in some such way they will soon be forgotten by Canadians. It might puzzle people half a century from now why the names were given, but that need make no difference. It pleases them so much and it hurts no one.

IS IT CONSTITUTIONAL?

THE Toronto Mail says, in reference to the disallowance question, that if the Manitobans "are to be deprived of their constitutional rights there is no telling what they may become." Does the Mail seriously maintain that under the constitution of Canada one of its Provinces has a constitutional right to charter a so-called local railway, but which is avowedly part of a line to extend into a foreign country, the other part being simultaneously constructed by foreigners to connect at the boundary, or does it seriously maintain that the constitutional right of veto is unconstitutionally used by the Dominion in such a case of the infraction of the spirit, if not the letter, of our constitution? Again, does the Mail maintain that a Canadian Province has a constitutional right to object to the Dominion's use of its constitutional veto power, when exercised to prevent the Province from frustrating, as far as possible, the policy adopted by the people of Canada of fostering their own industries and establishing inter-provincial communication on their own soil? We are not now discussing the expediency, but the constitutionality of the action on both sides.

SOME of the people of Manitoba who do not wish to lie under the imputation of being unreasonable or ungrateful, aver that they fully recognize the great benefit of the C. P. R. to their Province, but that they do not want monopoly and do want competition, which should not be denied to them. Well, have they ever tried to obtain it fairly? Have they ever tried to obtain a charter for a competing line also on Canadian territory? We do not believe there would be a moment's hesitation in assenting to it. Certainly they have experienced nothing but assistance in their Hudson Bay Railway project, though it would divert some traffic from the older Provinces. But it is quite another thing to tap the C. P. R., which has cost all Canada so much, in order to divert the traffic it has created, so that it may enrich, at comparatively trifling cost, a foreign railway company.

WE are asked by the London Advertiser to say why the Government removed the tax on anthracite coal, if the Canadian consumer did not pay the duty. We have already stated more than once that we think the repeal of the duty was a mistake, for we are not like the Advertiser ready to maintain that every that every thing done by political friends is right and every thing done by political friends is wrong, veering round like a weather cock to suit the occasion. Perhaps the Ministry were lead by the persistent howls of the Reformers into believing that the price would be lowered by the amount of the duty, but if so they have been deceived by false guides, for as we predicted the price has been fully maintained. The Toronto Mail follows the Advertiser in asking us to speak for the Administration, and is equally careful to avoid facts and figures.

"Affliction sore long time he bore, Physicians were in vain." But had he used Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," the greatest blood-purifier known, he might still be living. For all scrofulous diseases this preparation is a sovereign and never-failing remedy. It will cure consumption (which is a scrofulous disease of the lungs) if taken in time. All druggists have it.

Voices of West Point Cadets.

There is a Babel of voices, an odd intermingling of dialects; for every section of our broad Union is there represented, and no cliques are encouraged. South Carolina hobnobs with her old enemy, Massachusetts; creole blood from Louisiana is warmed by coffee from the same urn that starts the sluggish veins of the Pennsylvania Dutchman; soft voiced sons of Georgia and Kentucky elide their "r's" and swap merry badinage with a fellow whose backswood whang proclaims the "Pike" from Missouri; a swarthy Californian rips out some half Spanish, half savage expletive in excited controversy with his New England vis-a-vis, whose wildest flight in the possibilities of blasphemy is "Gosh all hemlock!" and a youth whose clear blue eyes and the blondest hair and skin imaginable proclaim him a Norseman who hails from a Scandinavian district in Minnesota happens along at the instant, with the red sash of the "officer of the day" over his shoulder, and the gentleman from the Golden Gate puts a bridle on his tongue forthwith.

The word of honor of the cadet is the ne plus ultra of West Point ethics; there is no going behind or beyond it. It is the first lesson taught the youngster on joining. It is preached in wordless sermons every day and hour of his four years' course. It is, the last thing of his education he is apt to forget. Like other boys, he has his fun, his faults, his vices and his "scrapes." He may violate every one of the few hundred regulations that have been evolved from year to year; he may "cut" church, "run it" to the Falls or other unhallowed resort; he may even make a predatory incursion upon the orchards or vineyards below the Point; but even to save himself or his best friend from punishment he draws the line at one thing—he won't lie. When a cadet says he has or has not done this or that, you can indorse the statement. [illegible] U. S. A. in Harper's Magazine.

Wanted Work.

I do not think there was a funnier sight than that where the Princess of Wales came forward with the sweep of a schoolgirl and climbed into the Deadwood coach without any assistance. Then the king of Saxony and the king of Greece climbed in after her. The crown prince of Sweden was on the box and Prince George of Wales, a dashing young naval officer, was upon the back part of the coach. Prince Albert Victor of Wales, the heir apparent to the English throne after the Prince of Wales, sat inside the coach and puffed cigarettes alternately in his mother's face and in that of the king of Denmark. Indeed, smokers who have been restricted for their lack of manners in enjoying the weed in the presence of ladies would have plenty of examples to justify their course among the royal members of this group. All of the men smoked their cigars or cigarettes. The smoke was puffed straight into the faces of the ladies of the group without apology from the smokers or protest upon their part. With the exception of the Prince and Princess of Wales, who are always graceful and easy, I think that this group of royal personages made up the most stiff and awkward appearing group of people that I have ever seen in public together.—London Letter.

Building Up a Business.

Two years ago a good natured looking cripple of some 30 years of age made his appearance at a certain Sixth avenue corner with a new wooden bucket filled with lemonade. He sold out several times over during the day. Thenceforward he was a regular feature of the corner. His bucket became two; then they were metamorphosed into a single big tin pail, and in time the pail became a pair. The cripple, who had carried the first pail to his post, now had to hire a boy to wheel his stock in a barrow. He was very popular with the fair sex, who pitied his misfortune and enjoyed his civility, which was so excessive as to be quite grotesque.

The following summer he appeared again and did better than ever. Last week I found him running a handsome ice cream and summer drinks' shop on the west side and doing a roaring trade. In two years, by industry, sobriety and economy the man so helpless as to be barely able to handle the money his customers pay him had made a business for himself. He had been crippled by accident and had no friends or money.—Alfred Trumble in New York News.

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

The Irish casket, with the names of 145,000 loyal Irishwomen, presented to the Queen, was very elegantly fashioned out of bog oak, with a lid carved by Irish ladies, and surmounted by a harp with golden strings, crown and all in correct form. Lady Londonderry held on her key most resolutely, and opened the box of Irish loyalty for the Queen's inspection, and thus reversed the legend of Pendora. This testimony of Irish loyalty pleased the Queen very much.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

The death is announced at Edinburgh of Mrs. Livingston of Drumsynie, Argyllshire, a great grand-daughter of Flora Macdonald.

CHAPTER XXIX.

CONDEMNED TO DEATH.

Half an hour passed in silence, which was only broken by the footsteps of the sentries as they tramped, or rather loitered, up and down, or by the occasional fall of some calcined masonry from the walls of the burned-out house. What between the smell of smoke and dust, the heat of the sun on the tin roof above, and of the red hot embers of the house in front, the little room where Bessie was shut up was almost unbearable, and she felt as though she should faint there upon the sacks. Through one of the cracks in the wagon house wall there blew a little draught, and by this crack Bessie placed herself, leaning her head against the wall so as to get the full benefit of the air and command a view of the place. Presently, several of the Boers came into the wagon house and proceeded to pull some of the carts and timber out of it, leaving one buck wagon, however, placed along the wall on the side opposite to the crack through which she was looking. Then they pulled the Scotch cart over to her side, laughing about something among themselves as they did so, and arranged it with its back turned toward the wagon, supporting the shafts upon a wagon jack. Next, out of the further corner of the place, they extracted an old saw bench and set it at the top of the open space. Then Bessie understood what they were doing; they were arranging a court, and the saw bench was the judge's chair. So Frank Muller meant to carry out his threat!

Shortly after this all the Boers, except those who were keeping guard, filed into the place and began to clamber on the buck wagon, seating themselves with much rough joking in a double row upon the broad side rails. Next appeared Hans Coetzee, his head bound up in a bloody handkerchief. He was pale and shaky, but Bessie could see that he was but little the worse for his wound. Then came Frank Muller himself, looking white and very terrible, and as he came the men stopped their joking and laughing. Indeed, it was curious to observe how strong was his ascendency over them. As a rule, the weak part of Boer organization is that it is practically impossible to get one Boer to pay deference to or obey another; but this was certainly not the case where Frank Muller was concerned.

Muller advanced without hesitation to the saw bench at the top of the space, and sat down on it, placing his rifle between his knees. After this there was a pause, and next minute Bessie saw her old uncle conducted in by two armed Boers, who halted in the middle of the space, about three paces from the saw bench, and stood one on either side of their prisoner. At the same time Hans Coetzee climbed up into the Scotch cart, and Muller drew a note book and a pencil from his pocket.

"Silence!" he said. "We are assembled here to try the Englishman, Silas Croft, by court martial. The charges against him are that by word and deed, notably by continuing to fly the English flag after the country had been surrendered to the republic, he has traitorously rebelled against the government of the country. Further, that he has attempted to murder a burgher of the republic by shooting at him with a loaded rifle. If these charges are proved against him he will be liable to death, by martial law. Prisoner Croft, what do you answer to the charges against you?"

The old man, who seemed very quiet and composed, looked at his judge and then replied:

"I am an English subject. I only defended my house after you had murdered one of my servants. I deny your jurisdiction over me, and I refuse to plead."

Frank Muller made some notes in his pocket book, and then said; "I overrule the prisoner's objection as to the jurisdiction of the court. As to the charges, we will now take evidence. Of the first charge no evidence is needed, for we all saw the flag flying. As to the second, Hans Coetzee, the assaulted burgher, will now give evidence. Hans Coetzee, do you swear in the name of God and the republic to speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?"

"Almighty, yes," answered Hans, from the cart on which he had enthroned himself, "so help me, the dear Lord."

"Proceed then."

"I was entering the house of the prisoner to arrest him, in obedience to your worshipful commands, when the prisoner lifted a gun and fired at me. The bullet from the gun struck me on the ear, cutting it and putting me to much pain and loss of blood. That is the evidence I have to give."

"That's right, that is not a lie," said some of the men on the wagon.

"Prisoner, have you any question to ask the witness?" said Muller.

"I have no questions to ask; I deny your jurisdiction," said the old man with spirit.

"The prisoner declines to question the witness, and again pleads to the jurisdiction, a plea which I have overruled. Gentlemen, do you desire to hear any further evidence?"

"No, no."

"Do you then find the prisoner guilty of the charges laid against him?"

"Yes, yes," from the wagon.

Muller made a further note in his book and then went on:

"Then, the prisoner having been found guilty of high treason and attempted murder, the only matter that remains is the question of the punishment required to be meted out by the law to such wicked and horrible offenses. Every man will give his verdict, having duly considered if there is any way by which, in accordance with the holy dictates of his conscience, and with the natural promptings to pity in his heart, he can extend mercy to the prisoner. As commandant and president of the court the first vote lies with me; and I must tell you, gentlemen, that I feel the responsibility a very hearty one in the sight of God and, my country; and I must also warn you not to be influenced or overruled by my decision, who am, like you, only a man, liable to err and be led away."

"Hear, hear," said the voices on the wagon, as he paused to note the effect of his address.

"Gentlemen and burghers of the state, my natural promptings in this case are toward pity. The prisoner is an old man, who has lived many years among us like a brother. Indeed, he is a 'voortrekker,' and, though an Englishman, one of the fathers of the land. Can we condemn such a one to a bloody grave, more especially as he has a niece dependent upon him?"

"No, no," they cried, in answer to this skillful touch upon the better strings in their nature.

"Gentlemen, those sentiments do you honor. My own heart cried but now 'No, no; whatever his sins have been, let the old man go free.' But then came reflection. True, the prisoner is old; but should not age have taught him wisdom? Is that which is not to be forgiven to youth to be forgiven to the ripe experience of many years? May a man murder and be a traitor because he is old?"

"No, certainly not!" cried the chorus on the wagon.

"Then there is the second point. He was a 'voortrekker' and a father of the land. Should he not therefore have known better than to betray it into the hands of the cruel, godless English? For, gentlemen, though that charge is not laid against him, we must remember, as throwing a light upon his general character, that the prisoner was one of those vile men who betrayed the land to Shepstone. Is it not a most cruel and unnatural thing that a father should sell his own child into slavery?—that a father of the land should barter away its freedom? Therefore on this point, too, does justice temper mercy."

"That is so," said the chorus with particular enthusiasm, most of them having themselves been instrumental in bringing the annexation about.

"Then one more thing: this man has a niece, and it is the care of all good men to see that the young should not be left destitute and friendless, lest they should grow up bad and become enemies to the well being of the state. But in this case that will not be so, for the farm will go to the girl by law; and, indeed, she will be well rid of so desperate and godless an old man.

"And now, having set my reason toward one side and the other before you, and having warned you fully to act each man according to his conscience, I give my vote. It is"—and in the midst of the most intense silence he paused and looked at old Silas, who never even quailed—"it is death."

There was a little hum of conversation, and poor Bessie, surveying the scene through the crack in the store room wall, groaned in bitterness and despair of heart.

Then Hans Coetzee spoke. It cut his bosom in two, he said, to have to say a word against one to whom he had for many years been as a brother. But, then, what was he to do? The man had plotted evil against their land, the dear land that the dear Lord had given them, and which they and their fathers had on various occasions watered, and were still continuing to water, with their blood. What could be a fitting punishment for so black hearted a traitor, and how would it be possible to insure the better behavior of other d—d Englishmen, unless they received stunning punishment? [Here the prisoner spoke, but his answer—though personally speaking, he uttered it with many tears, and that answer was death.

Discovery of Iron.

KINGSTON, Ont., July 26.—There is much excitement at Wilbur over the discovery of a deposit of iron on a farm of Mr. Shannon, a mile southwest of Wilbur. The iron is said to be the best quality that has been found in the district. A bed of phosphate was also found adjacent to the iron.

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order. Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Dastardly Outrage.

WOONSOCKET, R. I, July 26.—Unknown parties last night entered the weaving room of the large cottan mill of the Manville Company at Manville, and, by running a knife along the tops of the rolls, ruined some 5,000 yards of fancy goods on the looms. The mill was recently the scene of a weavers' strike.

It is reported that Lord Kilcoursie is about to despatch, at his own expense, a deputation of English labor representatives to Ireland to judge for themselves, and report to their fellow-laborers on the true condition of the Irish laboring population.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should a ways be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Wanted.

A Good Servant Girl. Apply at the Lock Co.'s office, Simcoe street. 1d22

Excursion.

St. John's Church Sunday School pupils and friends left town this morning on an excursion to Sturgeon Point.

A pair of Ladies' Button Boots and a Bottle of Good Polish for 80 cts. at Kidd's.

Stopped Running.

The factories lining the Dickson race suspended operations to-day on account of the water being let off at the dam to facilitate the repairing of the big saw mill.

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

New Principal at the Model.

Appointments in connection with the Board of Education, it was decided that a male teacher be secured to take the place of Miss Greenwood, resigned.

The Barracks.

The Salvation Army closed the purchase of a lot on Simcoe street from Mr. Geo. Kingdom to-day, the price paid being $1,680. As soon as those who occupy the houses on the lot vacate them, operations to build a barracks will be commenced.

The Grimsby Excursion.

On account of a misunderstanding with one of the railways a change has been made in the fare for the Firemen's excursion. The price of tickets has been reduced, and the excursion will run through to Grimsby for the low fare of $1.75 for the round trip, good for two days. d22

Run Over.

While little Jessie Porter, daughter of Mr. Chas. Porter, was crossing Simcoe street to-day she was run over by a passing buggy. The accident caused her parents considerable anxiety for a time, but fortunately it was found that excepting some bruises she was unhurt.

The Vote To-Morrow.

To-morrow from 9 o'clock a.m. until 5 p. m. the vote of the freeholders will be taken on the by-law to raise $25,000 by debentures for building bridges over the creek and cribbing Crescent street. The Deputy Returning Officers and the places of voting are the same as at the last municipal election.

The Lachine Bridge.

A friend in Montreal writing to Councillor Cahill on Monday says in his letter: "The first train crossed the new C. P. R. bridge at Lachine to-day at 3.30 p.m., having on board Sir Geo. Stephen, W. C. VanHorne, Sir Donald A. Smith, Hon. R. B. Angus and Mr. Shaughnessy. They announced their intention of running the Toronto train over the bridge next Monday."

Sunday School Picnic.

On Tuesday at one o'clock in the afternoon the steamer Golden Eye set sail from the Ashburnham wharf having on board about two hundred and twenty-five Sunday school pupils and teachers from St. Luke's parish, Ashburnham. The sail down the river to Savigney's Point was very enjoyable. In the evening the boat returned arriving at about half past eight o'clock. The afternoon was spent in sports of various kinds.

Children's Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at Kidd's.

Nursery.

We desire to call the attention of the public to the fact that a branch office of the St. Catharines nursery has lately been established in the town of Peterborough. The St. Catharines nursery is one of the oldest in Canada, and without doubt one of the best. It has been doing business over half a century, and is now prepared to supply all customers with the very best of Russian stock. Gentlemen wishing situations as agents or information with regard to the nursery business are respectfully invited to call and see the manager, as he is an experienced man and can give valuable information to all. By this branch people of this district can now arrange for getting their stock at home and without delay. The office will be managed by Mr. M. J. O'Leary from this date onward.

Coming With Band and Pipers.

The Montreal Witness says:—"The Grand Lodge and Grand Encampment of Ontario hold their annual sessions in Peterborough on the 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th of August. The Oddfellows and citizens of Peterborough are making great preparations to give the visitors a right royal welcome. One of the principal features of the meeting will be a grand parade of the uniformed branch of the Order. The 'Patriarchs Militant Cantons' are expected from all parts of Canada and several from the United States. Canton Mount Royal No. 1, of Montreal, will participate in the demonstration, and the fine band of the Victoria Rifles (forty-five pieces) will accompany them on the trip. By the kind consent of Lieut.-Colonel Henshaw and officers of the regiment, the band goes as a military band; three Highland pipers are also engaged. The Canton will leave here on Monday evening, the 8th August, and will return at the end of the week. The organization is hard at work drilling and getting into shape, and recruits are coming in briskly. The uniformed men will be the guests, free of all expense, of the town of Peterborough. They will be quartered in the new roller skating rink, which has been fitted up in fine style and can accommodate 2,000 men. The ladies of Peterborough will organize the commissariat department." d22

Rubber paint is ready for use; is easily applied and holds its rich, glossy appearance for many years. Rubber Floor Paint dries hard in twelve (12) hours; is durable and economical. All the choicest new shades in stock of this the best paint in the world. George Stethem. 1md2w26

Personal.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Scott, of Smith, have returned home from Manitoba, where they have been visiting their son, who lives near Brandon. Mr. Scott speaks in glowing terms of the crop prospects in Manitoba. He says that the farmers around Brandon, at least, do not take any interest in the boundary railway agitation. They look on it, he says, as a scheme of railway speculators.

Mr. E. Sanderson has received the appointment to the agency of the North American Life Assurance Co., held by Mr. A. Wilson. Mr. Sanderson will open up an office in town and no doubt will receive a fair share of the public patronage.

Mr. W. R. Miller, Inspector of Agencies for the North American Life, is in town on a business visit.

Col. Poole has returned to town from Algoma, where he has been spending the last two months.

Kidd has a line of Ladies' Kid Boots that he sells below wholesale prices, and no humbugging about it.

The Camp Store.

Mr. A Elliott has opened out the A. C. A. Camp store at Stoney Lake. On the morning of opening (Tuesday), the store was surrounded before sunrise and all day a great business was done. In connection with the camp store a barber shop will be conducted by Mr. Fred. Potvin, of the Grand Central Hotel barber shop.

H. S. Griffin & Co. are always on the outlook for bargains. This week they bought several lines of goods at half price. Spot cash at this season can procure startling value. Another line of 12½ cent. prints for 7½. Ladies' undervests, 25 cents, sailors in childrens, 20 cents. Cromptons $1.00 corsets for 50 cents, etc., etc., etc. 2d21-1w29

The East Riding.

Mr. B. Morrow informs us that the Deputy-Returning Officers for the East Riding in the Provincial election have all been paid some months since. This is the case also as regards the Dominion election.

A Handsome House.

Mr. Albert Lech is making preparations to erect a residence on the corner of Kirk and Rubidge streets. It will be of Queen Ann design and when completed will be among the handsomest in Peterborough.

Down by the Sea.

Adjutant Bolton has left town on a tour to the Maritime Provinces. He accompanied Commissioner Coombs.

The Review.

Citizens leaving town on their holidays can have the Review sent to them for the small sum of 10 cents a week.

Gospel Tent.

Mr. Munt, late Captain in the Saved Army, will assist at the service in the Gospel tent this evening.

A Bondsman Pays Up.

St. Thomas, July 26.—In April last a young man named John W. Mills, of Aylmer, was arrested for bigamy in having married Lucy Brooks, of Mitchell, and subsequently while she was visiting her father who had meantime removed to Mecosta, Mich., married Aggie Roe, daughter of a widow at Aylmer. Mills was released on bail, his father, John Mills, a wealthy resident of Aylmer, becoming his bondsman in $1,000. Young Mills levanted and his father was called upon to pay over the recognizance, which he did, though very reluctantly, yesterday morning, and will ask the Government to refund the sum.

Depression in the Cattle Trade.

Fort Worth, Tex., July 26.—Attachments to the amount of $115,603 have been made on the cattle firms of Curtis & Atkinson and E. F. & W. L. Juard, of Henrietta, Texas. Their liabilities are $550,000, and assets $1,115,000. The Henrietta National Bank with a capital stock of $150,000 and deposits of $87,000, closed its doors yesterday. The cause of the failures was the depressed condition of the cattle markets.

Pain-Killer will cure Cramps or Pains in any part of the body.

POLICE COURT.

INJURY TO PROPERTY.

Wednesday, July 27.—John Bertram, jr., Chas. Mathias, and Chas. Collins, three young lads, were charged by Grand Trunk Detective Spence with committing injury to property by throwing stones at a train. The two first mentioned pleaded guilty, but the third was found innocent. A fine of $1 and $1 damages was imposed upon the two boys. The sum was handed over to the Clerk.

SCOTLAND.

A copious and much needed rainfall was experienced all over Scotland on July 4th.

There were only 441 entries at the recent annual show of the Edinburgh Agricultural Association. Only horses, sheep and pigs were shown.

Victoria Public Park, Patrick, was opened on July 2nd by Sir Andrew Maclean, Provost of the burgh. A new park was also opened at Coatbridge.

A Paisley correspondent says about land there:—"A few years ago a certain estate office, with lands favourable for feuing, asked £3 per acre. Now the figure asked, after the more favourable sites have been disposed, is £30 per acre."

Mr. John Polson, of Paisley, entertained all the Sunday school children of Gourock and its vicinity, along with their teachers, at Castle Levan in celebration of the royal jubilee; the guests numbered nearly a thousand.

On June 28th while P. McCabe, Green End, Coatbridge, was filling his flask with blasting powder the barrel exploded. The six houses in the row were set on fire and totally destroyed, but McCabe was only badly burned about the hands.

The King of Saxony arrived at the Alexandra Hotel Edinburgh on June 30th, accompanied by the Earl of Hopetoun. After seeing the sights and visiting Forth Bridge he left for the Highlands.

The acerage of Edinburgh is stated at 6002, and the length of streets 130 miles. There are 42,413 inhabited houses. Fifty constables are employed in special duties, and 433 in ordinary duties. The total cost of the police is £45,094, but £1,982 is received for special services.

The Duke of Buccleuch is about to erect a memorial to his son, the late Earl of Dalkeith, on the spot on the hillside at Achnacarry, Inverness shire, where the lamented young nobleman lost his life in the Autumn of last year.

An action has been raised in the Court of Session by Peter Grieg, Clydeview, Partick, Glasgow, against [illegible] Co., Leith, and [illegible] of damages. The action arises out of a shipping dispute which occurred as far back as 1849.

Drowned at Rat Portage.

Winnipeg, July 26.—A sad accident occurred at Rat Portage last evening by which Fortunat Brunet, of Montreal, lost his life. Brunet, accompanied by Father Desjardins, J. F. Cox and E. Mason, all Montrealers, who had been visiting at Rat Portage, went into the lake to bathe. Brunet was taken with cramps and before assistance could reach him sank out of sight. His body was recovered shortly afterwards and will be sentt Montreal for interment.

Killed While Racing.

Sherbrooke, Que., July 26.—David Ray, recently from England, while racing yesterday, was killed by the Magantic special between Sherbrooke and Lennoxville. He leaves a wife and three small children. An inquest will be held to day.

For delicacy and richness of flavor, use Royal Extracts."

Two Men Drowned.

Winnipeg, July 26.—Robert Hare and Harry Burnam, both firemen on the Canadian Pacific Railway, were drowned this afternoon by the capsizing of a boat in the reservoir. Their bodies were recovered an hour later. Burnam came here from here from the Old Country, and his mother is said to reside at Belleville, Ont. Hare is also supposed to have relatives in Ontario. Both were unmarried.

MR. BRIGHT ON CANADA.

Commercial Unity Would be an act of Hostility Towards England.

Mr. John Bright wrote the following letter for publication in the Toronto Mail:—

Dear Sir.—I do not know what is intended by a commercial union between Canada and the United States. If you mean that no tariff should exist between the two countries, such a condition would be greatly to their mutual advantage, but if it is proposed to extend the States tariff to Canada as respects imports into Canada then such a change would be hostile to England and if the present Canadian tariff were maintained for imports other than from the States, England would be at a great disadvantage in her trade with Canada. I always believed that the imposition of high protective duties as against English manufactures was and is the first in the direction of separation of Canada from England, and if goods from the States are to be admitted into Canada free of duties or at lower duties than from England, another and more serious step would be taken in the direction of separation. If the States and Canada would adopt free trade or a tariff with low duties, following the example of England, the example of the English-speaking nations and would influence the world in favor of peace. The great enemies of mankind are war and the tariff. War and its expenditure and waste give an excuse for tariffs or render them necessary, and tariffs separate nations and make war more probable and more frequent. It is a deplorable thing that in your great and free continent the only thing not free is the industry of your people, and that you in this respect follow the pernicious example of the old and blind nations of Europe. England sets a grand example, and it is always a grief to me that her children in other lands and on your continent do not admire and follow it.

Yours, &c., John Bright.

THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1887.

It is stated that Mr. J. L. Lewis is to become managing editor of the Hamilton Spectator. Mr. Lewis was formerly connected with the press in Belleville and was for sometime city editor of the Intelligencer. From Belleville he went to Hamilton and has been city editor of the Spectator, of which paper he is to take the managing editorship. Mr. Lewis is a capable journalist, his experience on the press giving the necessary training to a mind naturally endowed with literary taste and talent. His friends in the east will be pleased to learn of Mr. Lewis' promotion on the staff of one of the best newspapers in Canada.

Another Test.

The Fire Department was put to a test on Wednesday evening which was surprisingly satisfactory. A little before eight o'clock an alarm was rung from Messrs. McKee & Davidson's hardware store. In two minutes and fifty-eight seconds four powerful streams were playing on George and Hunter streets. The efficiency of the department cannot now be questioned. The firemen are highly satisfied with the neat and comfortable way their rooms have been fitted up, and with the modern appliances which have replaced the cumbersome machinery a year ago. They take a pride in showing what they can do when they have the right tools to work with. A citizen who had not seen or heard of the previous test exclaimed, "Well, they're a deuced sharp lot of fellows, these firemen of ours."

ANOTHER RAILWAY PROJECT.

The Grand Trunk to Apply to the British Columbia Legislature.

CHICAGO, July 27.—The Times has a special despatch from Ottawa saying that the Grand Trunk Railway will apply to the British Columbia Legislature at its next session for a railway through the Yellowhead Pass, and through the Chilcotin country via Bute Inlet to Esquimalt. The Yellowhead Pass is about 150 miles north in the Rockies, from where the Canadian Pacific crosses the mountains. The proposed route, after getting out of the mountains would cross the Frazer river 200 miles above New Westminster. Connection will likely be made east of the Rockies with some system of railway independent of the C. P. R.

TORONTO, July 27.—None of the Grand Trunk officials in this city know anything of such a project as that outlined above.

THE CYCLONE COUNTRY.

Immense Damage Done by a Thunder Squall in Dakota.

CHICAGO, July 27.—A special from Fargo, Dakota, says Monday night's storm was the most violent ever known there. The wind was 80 miles an hour with a remarkable electrical display. Much damage was done. Mrs. Eckelson Thomson was struck by lightning and killed. A despatch from Glyndon, Minn., says a tornado struck the town of Moland on Monday evening blowing down several houses. There were 5 persons wounded, and among them Mrs. S. O. Lee. She will die.

ST. PAUL, July 27.—Specials to the Pioneer Press show that the storm of Monday night was unusually severe and the destruction in Dakota and Minnesota very extensive. Crops were badly injured. A freight train was struck by lightning and 40 mules were killed.

ANOTHER AMENDMENT

Proposed to the Irish Land Bill and Discussed.

LONDON, July 27.—The debate on the Irish Land Bill was resumed in the House of Commons to-day.

Mr. O'Doherty moved, on behalf of Mr. Parnell, to limit to three years the clause providing for written notices of evictions instead of the present method.

Mr. Balfour declined to accept the modification.

Mr. Dillon asked whether the Government would accept an amendment securing to the tenant undisturbed possession between the service of notice of eviction and the time of its redemption

Mr. Balfour said the Government would consider favorably any amendment that would secure the tenant a slight delay between the service of eviction and the execution of it.

J. W. Russell (Liberal Unionist) suggested a compromise whereby evicted tenants might be retained as caretakers, and in that capacity have six months' time in which to redeem their holdings. He supported the clause generally, because it would stop one quarter of the evictions and prevent public scandals.

Maurice Healy (Home Ruler) denied that the clause would abolish evictions. He contended that it would double evictions. The argument contrary was a sham and a lying pretence.

The Chairman: "The member from Cork must restrain his language." [Cries of "Hear hear."]

Mr. Healy, continuing, said it was an electioneering dodge to pretend that the Government's object was to abolish the scandal of evictions. The clause was so bad that it outweighed all the benefits of the bill. He would rather lose the bill than to have the clause retained. The clause was a deadly hostile blow at the tenants.

Hon. Geo. Shaw Lefevre (Home Ruler) said the Parnellites had a strong case. The clause was liable to great abuse and therefore should be temporary. A harsh landlord could easily convert his tenants into caretakers, when they would be at his mercy and liable to eviction at any moment.

Mr. Balfour said in that respect the clause did not change the existing law.

Mr. Parnell urged that the Government postpone decision on the clause until clause 22, dealing with the powers of the Land Court to settle evictions, was settled. He did not agree with Maurice Healy's persistent opposition, but preferred to defer final judgment until he could balance the risk of losing the bill against the undoubted risks to which the clause would subject tenants.

The chairman ruled against further debate.

The amendment offered by O'Doherty was lost, the vote being 156 for and 212 against it.

Lacrosse.

On Wednesday afternoon the Ætnas, of Peterborough, played the Millbrook lacrosse twelve in the Riverside Park for the Trebell cup, a very handsome piece of silver. The teams took their places on the field in the following order:—

MILLBROOK		ÆTNAS
C Richards	Goal	K. Kincaid
T McMahon	Point	F Larone
S Rivers	Cover Point	J Sanderson
A Chambers	1st. Def. Field	S Weir
E Howden	2nd Def. Field	J. McDonough
J Bateson	3rd Def. Field	J Sullivan
G True	Centre	W Dumble
W Strain	3rd Home Field	T Begley
G Patterson	2nd Home Field	A Weir
H Hewson	1st Home Field	F Metheral
R Foster	Outside Home	T Duncan
G Coombe	Inside Home	R Canning
S J True,	Field Captain	M Kincaid

Mr. J. Begley was the umpire for the Ætnas and Mr. Joe. Phelan was the referee.

The Ætnas, though most of them were little fellows, had altogether the advantage. The Millbrooks had a fairly good goal but in this field they were nowhere. The Ætnas won the match in three straight games.

TEXAN CATTLE.

The Annexationists Market for Canadian as it Really is.

A despatch from Denver, Col., says: "The cattlemen who now have their herds going north on the great cattle trail have decided upon a move which will face about 50,000 head now on the trail, and drive them back into Texas. The reason for so doing is because there is absolutely no market for the cattle. The meeting at which this decision was arrived at was held Tuesday night in the rooms of the Cattle Growers' Association. Among the cattlemen present were H. C. Tardy, of Del Rio, Texas, and agents representing the Simpson Cattle company, of Texas. Of the cattle now on the trail, 20,000 head have already entered Wyoming and 50,000 are reported in the vicinity of the Arkansas river. Yesterday the cattlemen went to Hugo, Col., to meet the superintendent and captains of the drive, to inform them of the action taken, and to give them orders for the return drive. This action practically removes from existence forever the long used 'cattle trail' for the transportation of cattle. Such a decision was only made after it became apparent that no remedy could be depended upon. The cause of the trouble lies principally in the exaggerated nature of the information affecting the stock market. It was thought that the hard winter had made cattle scarce in Wyoming, Montana and Dakota, and it was not learned that Wyoming wanted no cattle whatsoever until after the herds were started. For fourteen years the cattlemen have used the trail to Northern markets without a season's intermission, and many millions of dollars worth of cattle have passed over it. The trail begins 200 miles south of Fort Worth and takes a straight line to Wyoming, entering Colorado near West Las Apimas. The trail was established in 1863, and the cowboys had to fight their way through hostile bands of Indians for several years. Last year 300,000 cattle were driven over the trail; this year but 70,000 have been started, and two-thirds of these are now turned back. Theodore Ives, of Fort Worth, declares the act [illegible] will have the effect of putting $2,000,000 worth of beef back into Texas, which is already overstocked, thus driving prices down to ruinous figures. It may cause a number of failures.

Captain Cutler thought there would be no more shipments of cattle by trail. Texas will have to consume her own cattle. In other words, the cowmen will have to establish packing houses, do their own killing, and make their own shipments. The setting up of the Western country is what "played the mischief" with raising cattle in large herds. The trail has gradually been growing narrower until last year it was but three miles wide, and now this has been thrown open to settlement.

THE LAND BILL.

Further Discussion in the House of Commons—More Amendments.

LONDON, July 27.—In the House of Commons, last night, in the debate upon clause 2 of the land bill, the Government accepted Mr. Morley's amendment making compulsory instead of permissive the court order that the rent, as revised, be payable by the tenant.

Mr. Finucane (Nationalist) moved to make the revision retrospective to the extent of one gale.

Mr. Balfour opposed the motion.

Mr. Smith said that the Government was unable to accept such a compromise, but he promised that if the motion were withdrawn that the Government would try to deal with the matter in the report stage.

The motion was thereupon withdrawn and clauses two and three were adopted.

Mr. Parnell moved to eleminate clause 4, which provided for a written notification of eviction.

Mr. Balfour said he appreciated the warning of prolonged opposition to the clause, but he had to announce the firm determination of the Government to adhere to it.

Messrs. Morley and Dillon supported Mr. Parnell's motion. After further remarks by Messrs. Smith and Chamberlain, the amendment was rejected 212 to 150.

MARMORA.

AT REST.—David Bently, Division Court Clerk of the Township of Marmora and Post Master at the village of Marmora, died at his residence in Marmora, on Monday, July 25th, in his 75th year. The deceased has suffered severely for the past two years from the effects of an epileptic fit and other ailments. He deputized the duties of the post office to his daughter, Miss A. Bentley, who has discharged the obligations of the trust to the entire satisfaction of the public. Mr. Bently came to the village about 30 years ago from Kingston as manager for the old Marmora Iron Foundery Company. For many years he was bailiff of the Division Court, and afterward Clerk. This last office he has filled for the past 18 years or more. On Saturday he was about the village, but in the evening was stricken and lingered until Monday, when the release came. He leaves four children, two daughters and two sons, the latter being residents of Brooklyn, N. Y. The deceased was widely known throughout the North Riding as a hearty advocate of Conservative principles, and a man of great independence of character and firmness of conviction.—Intelligencer.

BOULANGER MAY HAVE TO GO.

PARIS, July 27.—The Boulanger question still agitates France and the probabilities that the Government will be compelled to notice some of the stories afloat concerning him, by calling him to account or remove him from active command in the army, are growing stronger daily.

IRISH AFFAIRS.

How the Proclamations Were Received in Limerick—Mgr. Persico's Report.

LONDON, July 27.—When the placards announcing the proclamation were posted in Limerick the corporation of that city met and unanimously passed resolutions declaring the proclamation to be an attack upon the rights of free speech and political organization, and, as such, deserving public condemnation.

Mgr. Persico, having practically completed his work of enquiry into the condition of Ireland, will return to Rome about the middle of August. It is asserted that the report of his investigation, which he has forwarded to the Pope, is drawn upon the same line as those upon which Cardinal Gibbons' memorial to the Holy Father was based, and it is surmised that the Pope, after reading it, will be thoroughly convinced of the fruitlessness of endeavoring to prevent the Irish Roman Catholic clergy from taking active part in Home Rule politics and anti-eviction demonstrations.

Mr. Gladstone's address to the Radical and Liberal Union Council, at Memorial Hall next Friday, is expected to be a scathing denunciation of the Government's Irish policy.

NO DISCRIMINATION.

The G. T. R. Before the Interstate Railway Commission.

At a recent sitting at Washington of the Interstate Railway Commission, among other cases heard were those of Lewis Larrison against the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Michigan Central against the Grand Trunk. The charge was unjust discrimination. Larrison complained that the road would not sell him a thousand mile ticket at the price paid by commercial travellers and the Michigan Central complained that the Grand Trunk was selling to commercial travellers at lower rates than to the public generally. The Commission decided that commercial travellers are not privileged to ride at lower rates than are paid by other persons. To charge one more than the other is unjust discrimination, and this is true whether mileage tickets are issued or in some other form. The refusal of the Chicago and Grand Trunk to sell Larrison a 1,000 mile ticket for $20, at which price commercial travellers bought them, was in conflict with the act.

SHOT BY BURGLARS.

A Hotelkeeper's Desperate Struggle With Two Robbers.

MONTREAL, July 27.—At two o'clock this morning two masked men entered the house of Victor Prevost at Sault Aux Recollect and got into a room where Mr. and Mrs. Pilon, guests of the proprietor, were asleep. The sleepers awoke and one of the men pointed a revolver at Pilon's head and said he would blow his brains out if he disturbed the house. Mrs. Pilon's cries roused Prevost, who came into the room and tackled one of the men. While tussling the other intruder shot Prevost through the back twice, after which he escaped.

TO SELL ORE OR MAKE IRON.

The Ottawa Journal gives a long account of some rich iron mines near the Dominion Capital, and of the intended dealings with them. In its introductory remarks it says:—

"The Bristol Iron Mines in Pontiac County, some forty-five miles up the Ottawa from the Capital, are being rapidly put into working order, and their product will be for sale next season. For the present it is not contemplated to erect blast furnaces. The iron ore will be mined and shipped to Cleveland. The mines are evidently considered abroad to be of great importance. The Iron Trade Review of Cleveland, publishes an exhaustive article on them, covering several pages and accompanied by maps and plans of the property."

Summarizing this article the Journal proceeds to give a description of the mine, its veins of ore with their quality and analysis, the proprietary, and the means of transport to Cleveland, Ohio. It is pointed out as to this last point that the distance to Cleveland is little over 500 miles, while much of the ore used there is carried 800 miles.

As to the cost we are told:—

From data based on actual experience, as well as from propositions now in the hands of the syndicate, we make the following estimate as to the cost of mining and marketing the ore.

	Per ton.
Cost of mining	$ 50
Roasting	35
Handling at the mine	15
Rail freight to the St. Lawrence	1 00
Loading	25
Lake freight to Cleveland (including unloading)	90
Duty	75
Agents, commission, insurance, interest, &c	15
Total	$4 25

Ore of this grade free from sulphur is now selling in Cleveland at $6 and $6.50. With increased handling facilities at mine and river, the cost would be reduced to but slightly over $4 per ton.

We thus see that the cost laid down at Cleveland (to say nothing of the 50 per cent. profit) is $4.25. Of this only $1.20 is the cost at the mine and no less than $3.05 the freight and expenses to Cleveland. Would not this amount be sufficient to bring coal or coke from the States or from Nova Scotia, and remembering that a ton of fuel is the required quantity to smelt a ton of ore, can any good reason be given why the fuel should not be brought to the ore instead of the ore to the fuel?

The Journal concludes as follows:—

"The gentlemen comprising the syndicate have embarked in the enterprise, not as a speculation, but solely on business principles, and they propose to develop the property to its fullest extent. The mine is not for sale, but its products will be by next season. It is within the scope of the syndicate's plans to smelt the ore at the mines, but this is a matter for future consideration. The new Canadian tariff doubles the previous rate on pig iron, placing it now at $2 per ton, and affords ample protection. The present consumption of Canada is equivalent to 250,000 tons of pig iron, leaving steel rails out of the question altogether, so that under the new tariff an immediate and steady home market is assured. With a continuance of the same intelligent and progressive management as in the past, there is no reason to doubt that the new district will soon take a most important rank among the iron producing districts of the Dominion."

At present it seems Canada is to be made poorer by the loss of this valuable ore, while capitalists, operatives and those who supply them in the United States are to be enriched by the profit of manufacturing the iron and perhaps selling it back to us. It is true we are taught to hope that the ore will one day be smelted at home, but is there not danger that the good time will be postponed till the mine is exhausted. The new duty we are told affords ample protection, but it must not be forgotten that the United States tariff is still more protective. A violent effort is being made to sweep away our protective duty as against the United States iron men, while adopting the higher duty in favor of the United States against British iron. This very agitation in favor of handing over Canada to the manufacturers of the United States is an obstacle in the way of establishing the iron industry in Canada. If we would see furnaces started in Ontario we must promptly negative the unpatriotic request that Canada should be given over to Yankee aggrandizement, and we must put an export duty on our valuable iron ores that they may not be carried away to enrich foreigners, but may be utilized at home.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

Some very unfair criticisms have been levelled at the Melbourne Argus on account of some remarks it makes relative to the different mail lines between Australia and Great Britain. The Argus says:—

"There is no objection at all to abandoning the present San Francisco contract for a Canadian service. On the contrary, Australia ought to make a financial sacrifice to promote the change—a change which means an American route through British territory; but on the other hand, we cannot afford to check the development of the Cape and Canal route, which are giving us the magnificent new vessels of the Peninsular and Orients and Orient lines. Sentiment is sentiment and we value the Canadian-Australian sentiment highly. But business is business."

This is just what might have been expected from the loyalty of the Australians to the Empire of which they form a part. They do not feel willing to abandon old imperial routes which have served them well in the past, but they are ready to welcome the addition of another Imperial route through Canada, abandoning for it the foreign competitive route. This is the spirit we wish to see in every part of the Empire; a due regard for local interests combined with a resolve to favor any other portion of the Empire as against foreigners. This is an example that might be followed with advantage by a few discontented and unpatriotic Canadians. Anyone who can see disloyalty in such a spirit must be intensely stupid. As to the home competition suggested between the different mail lines we are quite willing to abide by the result, feeling sure that the Canadian route has the superiority and will therefore obtain the preference after a sufficient trial.

The Story of Ruskin's Marriage.

Two or three letters have recently been received asking for the story of Ruskin's marriage. The story is this: When comparatively young he became [illegible] unworldly maiden, some years his junior, whom he thought beautiful, according to the rules and theories of art, and whom he wooed on art principles. He married her, though he was too unnatural to need a wife, and treated her as if she had been a statue, admiring her in a cold, abstract way, not altogether grateful to a young woman of ardent temperament. Months passed, their relations undergoing no change, he contented, she discontented. Meanwhile he had engaged Millais, with whom as a pre-Raphaelite he was much concerned, to paint her portrait. The susceptible artist was struck by her beauty, and being of a totally different constitution from Ruskin, fell passionately in love with her. But loyal to his friend, and a man of honor, he showed her only the conventional respect that was due, stifling the hunger of his heart.

Ruskin was at last aroused to his own marital defects, and to a sense of the mutual love between his wife and the painter. He finally opened the subject, and, blaming himself for marrying, told her what he had observed. Overwhelmed with surprise and confusion, and unconscious up to that time of her own emotions or the awakening of her heart, the truth suddenly dawned upon her. She found that she was only a woman after all, not a frigid figure for the lofty pedestal on which her nominal husband had placed her. He acted magnanimously, deciding not to stand in the way of the happiness of two persons who were fitted for each other. The matter was managed quietly, but in due time she was released from her matrimonial bonds and became Mrs. Millais. The celebrated artist having been knighted, she is now Lady Millais. The three have been good friends ever since, and two of them are indebted to the third for their connubial happiness, and still vividly mindful of their obligation.—Philadelphia Press.

Training a Trick Dog.

"Does it take you a long time to train dogs?"

"A clever dog can be trained to do a number of good tricks in a few months. Among fox terriers and poodles, especially females, I have found the largest number of clever dogs. It is advantageous to begin with dogs when they are still pups. For the first thing you want to teach a dog is his name, and you can teach that to a pup. Next in order comes the jump. Simply stand on the other side of the obstacle with a tempting morsel of food, and do not let the dog have it if he runs under the obstacle. Begging, standing and walking on the hind legs are also taught with the aid of a morsel of food. So is going up the ladder. Simply put the morsel on one of the rungs far enough from the ground to compel the dog to climb up a few rungs. Then place it higher and higher. When he's once learned to go up the ladder it's merely a question of a little while before he learns the other circus tricks."—Globe-Democrat Interview.

OVER WORKED Women

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc.

After this there were no more speeches, but each man voted according to his age, upon his name being called by the president. At first there was a little hesitation, for some among them were fond of old Silas, and loath to destroy him. But Frank Muller had played his game very well, and, notwithstanding his appeals to their independence of judgment, they knew full surely what would happen to him who gave his vote against the president. So they swallowed their better feelings with all the ease for which such swallowing is noted, and one by one uttered the fatal word.

When they had all done Frank Muller addressed Silas:

"Prisoner, you have heard the judgment against you. I need not now recapitulate your crimes. You have had a fair and open trial by court martial, such as our law directs. Have you anything to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon you in accordance with the judgment?"

Old Silas looked up with flashing eyes, and shook back his fringe of white hair like a lion at bay.

"I have nothing to say. If you will do murder, do it, black hearted villain that you are! I might point to my gray hairs, to my murdered servant, to my home that took me ten years to build, destroyed by you! I might tell you how I have been a good citizen and lived peaceably and neighborly in the land for more than twenty years—ay, and done kindness after kindness to many of you who are going to murder me in cold blood! But I will not. Shoot me if you will, and may my death lie heavy on your heads. This morning I would have said that my country would avenge me; I cannot say that now, for England has deserted us and I have no country. Therefore I leave the vengeance in the hands of God, who never fails to avenge, though sometimes he waits for long to do it. I am not afraid of you. Shoot me now if you like. I have lost my honor, my home and my country; why should I not lose my life also?"

Frank Muller fixed his cold eyes upon the old man's quivering face and smiled a dreadful smile of triumph.

"Prisoner, it is now my duty, in the name of God and the republic, to sentence you to be shot to-morrow at dawn, and may the Almighty forgive you your wickedness and have mercy upon your soul.

"Let the prisoner be removed, and let a waggon full speed to the empty house on the hillside, where the Englishman with the red beard used to live, one hour this side of Wakkerstroom, and bring back with him the clergyman he will find waiting there, that the prisoner may be offered his ministrations. Also let two men be set to dig the prisoner's grave in the burial place at the back of the house."

The guards laid their hands upon the old man's shoulders, and he turned and went with them without a word. Bessie watched him go, through her crack in the wall, till the dear old head with its fringe of white hairs and the bent frame were no longer visible, and then, at last, her faculties, benumbed and exhausted by the horrors she was passing through, gave out, and she fell forward in a faint there upon the sacks.

Meanwhile Muller was writing the death warrant on a sheet of his pocket book. At the foot he left a space for his own signature, but he did not sign it for reasons of his own. What he did do was to pass it round to be countersigned by all who had formed the court in this mock trial, his object being to implicate every man there present in the judicial murder by the direct and incontrovertible evidence of his sign manual. Now, Boers are simple pastoral folk, but they are not quite so simple as not to see through a move like this, and thereon followed a very instructive little scene. They had, to a man, been willing enough to give their verdict for the old man's execution, but they were by no means ready to record it in black and white. As soon as ever they understood the object of their feared and respected commandant a general desire manifested itself to make themselves respectively and collectively scarce. Suddenly they found that they had business outside, and something like a general attempt at a bolt ensued. Several of them had already tumbled off their extemporized jury box, and, headed by the redoubtable Hans, were approaching the entrance to the wagon house, when Frank Muller perceived their design and roared out in a voice of thunder:

"Stop! Not a man leaves this place till the warrant is signed."

Instantly the men halted and began to look innocent and converse.

"Hans Coetzee, come here and sign," said Muller again, whereupon that unfortunate advanced with as good a grace as he could muster, murmuring to himself curses, not loud but deep, upon the head of "that devil of a man, Frank Muller."

However, there was no help for it, so, with a sickly smile, he put his name to the fatal document in big, shaky letters. Then Muller called another man, who instantly tried to get out of it on the ground that his education had been neglected and that he could not write, an excuse that availed him little, for Frank Muller quietly wrote his name for him, leaving a space for his mark. After that there was no more trouble, and in five minutes the entire back of the warrant was covered with the scrawling signatures of the various members of the court.

One by one the men went, till at last Muller was left alone, seated there on the saw bench, his head sunk upon his breast, holding the warrant in one hand, while with the other he stroked his golden beard. Presently he stopped stroking his beard and sat for some minutes perfectly still, so still that he might have been carved in stone. By this time the afternoon sun had got behind the hill and the deep wagon house was full of shadow that seemed to gather round him and invest him with a somber, mysterious grandeur. He looked like a king of evil, for evil has her princes as well as good, and stamps them with her imperial seal of power, and crowns them with a diadem of her own; among these Frank Muller was surely great. A little smile of triumph played upon his beautiful, cruel face, a little light danced within his cold eyes and ran down the yellow beard. At that moment he might have sat for a portrait of his master, the devil.

Presently he awoke from his reverie. "I have her!" he said to himself; "I have her in a vise! She cannot escape me; she cannot let the old man die! Those curs have served my purpose well; they are as easy to play on as a fiddle, and I am a good player. Yes, and now we are getting to the end of the tune."

CHAPTER XXX

"WE MUST PART, JOHN."

Jess and her companion stood in awed silence and gazed at the blackening and distorted corpses of the thunderblasted Boers. Then they went past them to the tree which grew some ten paces or more on the other side of the place of destruction. There was some little difficulty in getting the horses past the corpses, but at last they came with a wheel and a snort of suspicion, and were tied up to the tree by John. Meanwhile Jess took some of the hard boiled eggs out of the basket and vanished. She sat herself on a slab of flat stone out of the glare of the sun, and ate her breakfast of hard boiled eggs, reflecting meanwhile on the position in which she found herself. For her heart was very sore and heavy, and she could find it in her to wish that she was lying somewhere beneath those rushing waters. She had calculated on death, and now she was not dead, and she and her shame and her trouble might yet live for many a year. She was like one who in her sleep had seemed to soar on angel's wings out into the airy depths, and then awakened with a start to find that she had tumbled from her bed. All the heroic scale, all the more than earthly depth of passion, all the spiritualized desires that had sprung into being beneath the shadow of the approaching end, had come down to the common level of an undesirable attachment, along which she must now drag her weary feet for many a year. Nor was that all. She had been false to Bessie, and more, she had broken Bessie's lover's troth. She had tempted him and he had fallen, and now he was as bad as she. Death would have justified all this; she would never have done it had she thought she was going to live; but now death had cheated her, as he has a way of doing with people to whom his presence is more or less desirable, and left her to cope with the spirit she had invoked when his sword was quivering over her.

What would be the end of it, supposing they escaped? What could be the end except misery? It should go no further, far as it had gone, that she swore; no, not if it broke her heart and his, too. The conditions were altered again, and the memory of those dreadful and wonderful hours when they two swung upon the raging river and exchanged their undying troth, with the grave for their altar, must be a memory and nothing more.

She rose and walked back to the spot where she had left John an hour before. He was employed when she reached him in saddling up the second of the two grays with the saddles and bridles that he had removed from the carcasses of the horses which the lightning had destroyed.

"Hullo, Jess, you look quite smart. Have you dried your clothes?" he said. "I have after a fashion."

"Yes," she answered.

He looked at her. "Why, dearest, you have been crying. Come, things are black enough, but it is no use crying. At any rate, we have got off with our lives so far."

"John," said Jess, sharply, "there must be no more of that. Things have changed. We were dead last night; now we have come to life again. Besides," she added, with a ghost of a laugh, "perhaps you will see Bessie to-morrow. I should think we ought to have got to the end of our misfortunes."

John's face fell, as the recollection of the impossible and most tragic position in which they were placed, physically and morally, swept into his mind.

"My dearest Jess," he said, "what is to be done?"

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

NO HOSTILITY.

There is no hostility in the east, to Manitoba; quite the contrary, but the first duty owed by us all is obedience to the constitution. No other Province claims a right to charter a railway to a foreign frontier; and if the constitution may be violated in one particular so it might in another.—Monetary Times.

Horsfords Acid Phosphate.

IN DIGESTIVE DISORDERS:

Dr. E. V. Wright, Saratoga Springs, New work, says: "I have used it for years, and my experience has proved beyond question that the peculiar combination of phosphates renders it most valuable in the treatment of digestive disorders."

The gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for June were $1,059,507, showing a net profit of $388,703, as compared with $376,449 for June, 1886. For the six months ending June there was a net profit of $341,337, as compared with $1,293,615 for the first six months of last year.

Consumption Can be Cured

By proper, healthful exercise, and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, which contains the healing and strengthening virtues of these two valuable specifics in their fullest form. Dr. D. D. McDonald, Petitcodiac, N.B., says: "I have been prescribing Scott's Emulsion with good results. It is especially useful in persons with consumptive tendencies." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

Mrs. Allan Elder, who two years ago presented Elder Park to the people of Glasgow at an outlay of about £50,000, paid a visit to the park on July 4th. Inside the grounds were displayed flags in honour of the occasion, and at the principal entrance the words—"Welcome back again."

Mrs. Kennedy, who had just finished her honeymoon, was bathing in a lake in Moyree, County Clare, with several companions, when she suddenly disappeared and was drowned. At Cara Lake [illegible] the boat, her clothes not having been moved a considerable time afterwards, a search was instituted, and their dead bodies were recovered.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Gospel Tent.

The tent services are still being continued. Mr. Munt spoke last night and is announced for Thursday and Friday nights.

In Operation Again.

The mills on the Dickson race, which were closed down on Wednesday while repairs were in progress at the big saw mill, are running again.

Real Estate Sale.

The residence of Mr. J. W. Flavelle on Queen street was sold by auction on Wednesday, Mr. Stapleton conducting the sale. It was purchased by Mr. David Knox, the price being $4,575.

A Pair of Ladies' Button Boots and a Bottle of Good Polish for 80 cts at KIDD'S.

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

An Error.

A mistake was made in the notice of the Court of Revision session held a few evenings ago. Mr. G. W. Hatton appeared for the Water Company, instead of Mr. G. M. Roger, as stated. Mr. Roger appeared for the town.

A. C. A. Flags.

Mr. Roland C. Strickland, Chairman of the Regatta Committee of the A. C. A., would be glad if the ladies, who have kindly promised flags for prizes, would if possible send them to him at Lakefield by Saturday, July 30th.

The Grimsby Excursion.

On account of a misunderstanding with one of the railways a change has been made in the fare for the Firemen's excursion. The price of tickets has been reduced, and the excursion will run through to Grimsby for the low fare of $1.75 for the round trip, good for two days. d22

St. John's

The St. John's Church Sunday School went away from town on Wednesday last and had an exceedingly enjoyable day's outing. About two hundred altogether, got aboard of the train at the Grand Trunk station in the morning and a little after 12 o'clock reached Sturgeon Point. Here picnics were had or the hotels were patronized for dinner. The afternoon was spent in canoeing, foot racing, and so forth. The excursion party got back to town at about 9 o'clock in the evening.

Drowning Accident.

A sad drowning accident occurred at Stoney Lake on Wednesday evening. Mr. W. R. Deprose and friends were camping on the A. C. A. Island. Himself and two others went for a bathe and while in the water Mr. Deprose took cramps and sank. Every effort was put forward to save him but it was not till an hour after that the body was brought to the camp. The deceased was a son-in-law of Mr. Simpson, Smith. He was married only about four months ago and leaves a young wife to mourn his sad loss. He was a fine, steady young fellow twenty-five years of age. The New York Mutual Life Insurance Company hold a risk of a $1,000.

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

Excursion to Belleville.

Quite a number of Peterborough citizens availed themselves of the cheap fare to Belleville and paid a visit to the City of the Bay on Wednesday. It was Belleville's civic holiday and a great picnic in aid of the building fund of St. Michael's Church was the centre of attraction. Among the important features of the picnic was a baseball match between the Kingston and Belleville nines. Belleville won by a score of 14 to 7, whitewashing Kingston 7 times during the game. The picnic was held in the Agricultural grounds, and it is estimated that over four thousand people were in attendance. Besides the baseball match there were other sports consisting of running and trotting races, firemen's races, bicycle races, and athletic sports. Those who went down from Peterborough were highly delighted with the day's sports.

A FAREWELL.

Mr. J. W. Flavelle Presented with an Earnest of High Esteem.

On Wednesday evening a large number of people assembled at the regular prayer meeting at the George Street Methodist Church. After the prayer meeting the pastor, the Rev. Mr. Wallace, read an appropriate passage of Scripture and afterwards went on to say that it had been the unanimous wish of the congregation to give a public farewell to brother J. W. Flavelle, and that this time had been chosen. He had known brother Flavelle since Joe was a little boy. When here nine years ago he was just showing indications of being a useful member of the church. It was with great joy that he found when coming back to Peterborough that God had ripened his abilities and that those abilities had been consecrated to God's service. It was with as much sorrow, however, just as he came to be pastor of this church, that the first duty almost he was called upon to perform was to say good-bye to brother Flavelle. It would have given him great pleasure to have had brother Flavelle here during his term.

Mr. Flavelle, together with Messrs. Griffin, Schofield and Dumble, stood at the front of the audience as the following address was read by the pastor:—

To J. W. Flavelle, Esq.:

DEAR BROTHER,—On behalf of the congregation and Sunday School of the George Street Methodist Church, Peterborough, we beg to express to you, on the occasion of your departure for Toronto, our great sorrow at parting with you, our high appreciation of the life and character which have endeared you to us all, and our gratitude to Almighty God for the good work which you have been enabled to do in our midst.

You have grown with the growth of our beautiful town. You have been a boy among the boys, a man among the men of Peterborough; and all through, while your abilities have made your career prominent, your consecration to God has kept your record clean.

You have been known to all men as a lover of truth, earnest in the search after it, bold in the advocacy of it. You have shrunk from no responsibility which God and your brethren have placed upon you. You have feared no consequences of righteous action. We honor that Christian manliness in you which has been an example and an inspiration to the young men of our town.

Becoming at an early age a member and an official of the Methodist Church, you have been assiduous in your attention to the interests of the Church, liberal in the support of her enterprises, faithful to her doctrines and usages.

As lovers of temperance, law and order, we recognize and honor in you a leader who has consecrated, without stint, money, time and energy to the great and arduous task of promoting sobriety, of securing prohibition of the liquor traffic, and of enforcing without fear or favor the righteous law of the land.

It is with special pleasure that we refer to your great work during the past five years as superintendent of the large and flourishing Sunday School of our Church. Here you have gathered about you a band of officers and teachers who have loved you, who have been incited to earnest Christian service by your example, who have been trained in wise methods of Christian work by your instruction. Here you have won the affection of hundreds of scholars, and have led many of them to the knowledge of their Saviour. Here you will be affectionately remembered. Here your teaching will, we believe, abide as good seed in good soil, and bring forth the fruit of holy living.

With one heart we bid you, dear brother, a loving farewell, as you go from us, and a hearty God speed as you enter upon the duties of your new sphere of labor. And with you, in these loving wishes, we associate your esteemed wife and your dear child. May the Lord be to you and yours a "shield and an exceeding great reward."

We beg that you will do us the pleasure to accept the accompanying gold watch as a slight token of our affectionate regard.

F. H. WALLACE, Pastor.
D. W. DUMBLE, Recording Steward.
H. S. GRIFFIN, Superintendent of the Sunday School.

Mr. Schofield then handed over a plush case to Mr. Dumble and the latter in presenting it to Mr. Flavelle made an address in his official capacity, as Recording Steward. He dwelt upon Mr. Flavelle's sterling virtues, his manliness, his firmness in discountenancing wrong doing even though he provoked the anger of some people, and bore testimony as one who knew Mr. Flavelle from his youth up that his record was clean. They could ill afford to lose such a strong man. Not only the church but the community would be the loser. He felt consoled, however, to know that brother Flavelle was going to a larger sphere and one in which his strong Christain character would exert an influence ever stronger than the influence exerted here. It was such characters which left their impress upon history. He prayed to God to bless brother Flavelle and to give him success in his new home.

Mr. Flavelle said that he had been told about this meeting last night, but though he had thought over and over again what to say, he was still at as great loss as when he started. He did not know why he should be treated in so remarkably kind a manner. In fact he was the debtor. It was the influence of his blessed mother and this church that had made him what he was. The church took him up, cared for him and bore with him and the better part of his manhood was developed. When a lad he had entered the Sunday School and there was nurtured. He humbly thanked God for the gracious help this church had given him. He asked permission to make a personal remark. It had been said that through his opposition to the liquor traffic his business had suffered, and that was the reason of his moving from town. It was utterly a mistake. His business had not suffered through his opposition to the liquor traffic, and his resolution to go to Toronto had been made before ever the Scott Act adoption was mooted here. No young man need be afraid to oppose the liquor traffic for he would not suffer. He concluded with asking the congregation to support brother Griffin in his labors as the new Superintendent of the Sunday School, and with thanking them for the kind reference to his wife.

Mr. W. J. MASON spoke in a very kind way, giving all credit to Mr. Flavelle where he was deserving of it.

FRIDAY, JULY 29, 1887.

MR. JOHN BRIGHT.

WHETHER we agree or disagree with Mr. Bright, nobody can deny that he expresses in a manly fashion his honest and conscientious convictions. His recent letter concerning the fiscal policy of Canada is no exception. Of course as a thorough going freetrader Mr. Bright condemns and regrets the protective policies of both Canada and the United States, just as he also regrets and condemns war and the maintenance of standing armies. In theory he is of course right if he could persuade all men to be of his opinion, but, taking the world as we find it, just as a nation must be prepared to meet an attack from a foreign army, so it must protect its industries from the hostile competition of foreign countries protecting themselves against equivalent commercial invasion. Not even the failure of the predictions of his friend Cobden, nor the practice of the whole civilized world outside the Three Kingdoms, have been able to shake the conviction of Mr. Bright that free trade is not only theoretically good but practically attainable.

But as to the main point of his letter Mr. Bright's opinion is valuable as showing the view that would be taken in the Mother Country of our commercial annexation to the United States. British freetraders are not to be deluded by the sophistry of their Canadian imitators into believing that the adoption of a higher tariff by Canada is an acceptance of free trade. Neither are British protectionists, a strong body who will soon be in a majority if they are not so already, prepared to admit that the free admission of manufactures from their great industrial rival is protection for our own industries. Both freetraders and protectionists will agree with Mr. Bright in viewing it as a hostile policy towards the Mother Country and the rest of the Empire, if Canada should resolve to favour foreigners and give them a preference over our fellow subjects. Our National Policy, if inconvenient to British manufacturers, was not especially aimed at them and placed them on at least an equal footing with foreigners, being framed with the local object of fostering Canadian industries. The restricted reciprocity which stands on our statute book ready for acceptance by our neighbour, if accepted by them would be equally free from discrimination, for it provides for the abandonment of the duties on the specified articles altogether, not their abrogation for foreigners and their maintenance against those living under the same flag as ourselves. But unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union with the States and against the rest of the Empire is quite another thing, being an act of hostility as open as if we waged war against the Imperial forces. Mr. Bright is pre-eminently friendly to the United States, so it is owing to no feeling against them that he deprecates the proposal for us to ally ourselves with them against the rest of the Empire, and the people of the three kingdoms, almost without exception, would share his views. And while alienating the Mother Country and sister colonies, we would be abandoning our own industries to destruction for the benefit of foreigners.

DISINTEGRATION THREATENED.

THE true meaning of the conference of Provincial Premiers is plainly manifested by the restriction now proposed by the advocates of this political device. They declare that only the Provinces first confederated can be admitted, that is the four Reform Premiers of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, while the Conservative Premiers of other Provinces are to be excluded. Is not this proof positive, if any were required, that the scheme is in no sense a meeting between the authorities of the Provinces of Canada to discuss their common interest and arrange for consistent action, but is a mere conspiracy of leaders of the party in opposition to utilize their public position as a means of attacking the constitutional authorities of the Dominion, because the people have chosen to entrust Conservatives with power.

It is a mere attempt on the part of unscrupulous politicians to pose as small editions of Jefferson Davis and to attack the Central Government because they are not allowed to control it. At present they are not bold enough to try actual force, though quite ready to stir up others to rebellion. But those who start in such a course and lead others astray cannot tell if they can control the movement when once commenced or say how far it shall go. If evil results, those who originated the trouble will be responsible.

LORD SALISBURY'S VIEWS.

Topics of the Hour—The Course Pursued by Mr. Gladstone.

LONDON, July 28.—Lord Salisbury, speaking at Norwich last night, said that Mr. Morley had boasted that a Liberal success was assured, but he doubted whether any political strength, based upon the rotten relations existing between Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell, could be permanent. Mr. Gladstone had urged that the whole civilized world condemned England's policy. What had Mr. Gladstone to say to the fact that the whole civilized world condemned free trade. Anyhow the Government's policy held the field. Mr. Gladstone had formulated no policy. Referring to the Egyptian convention, Lord Salisbury said it was mainly useful to Turkey, and that England suffered nothing by its rejection. As for the recent bye-elections, he did not believe the result indicated a turn of public opinion in favor of Home Rule. There was no Home Rule plan now before the country that anyone was bold enough to own.

A Gigantic Steamboat.

NEW YORK, July 28.—The largest steamboat in the world is to be built for the Fall River Line. She will be called the Puritan, and will be a companion boat to the Pilgrim of that line now the largest steamboat afloat. The Puritan will be 404 feet long at the water, thirty feet longer than the Pilgrim She will have 355 state rooms, all the modern improvements, including feathering paddles, and the largest compound beam engine in existence. She will cost $1,500,000, and will be finished in May, 1889.

A New Baseball League.

The Belleville Ontario says:—"For some time past there has been considerable talk of organizing a league in this district to play off a certain number of games for the championship. As there was a large gathering of base ball enthusiasts at the match yesterday between Kingston and the local nine the secretary of the Bellevilles gathered together some representatives of the different clubs likely to go into the league, and at 6.45 sharp, the meeting was called to order. Mayor Biggar being in the chair. The representatives present were R. J. Eilbeck and W. Carson of the Kingston City Nine; Jas. Little, W. McConville and Con. Millan, of the Park Nine, and W. H. Biggar, Jas. Jenkins and H. A. Yeomans, of the Bellevilles. All expressed a willingness to take part in the series, and after a few introductory remarks all got to work to arrange a schedule for the games. Each club is to play each other club five games, and the winner of the greatest number of games is to receive the pennant emblematic of the championship, and valued at $100."

Lindsay will Be There.

The Lindsay Post says:—"The Lindsay Canoe Club will be well represented at the Northern Division meet and camp at Stoney Lake. Over twenty-five have arranged to combine in one party and camp together. Louis Downey, who is famed as a chef and pastry cook, goes down by rail to Lakefield and steamer to the camp ahead of the party, taking the camp equipage with him. Louis promises to lay out a bill of fare that will be the envy of the campers round about." In another paragraph the same paper says:—"On Tuesday a party of canoeists en route for Stoney Lake arrived in town and their canoes and traps were housed at the local club house, foot of Riddout street. The party included Messrs. Tyson and W. and C. Fraser, of Toronto J. and H. McKendrick, of Galt, Rich. Lees, of Brampton, and R. Walters of Norwood. They will canoe it down to camp by way of the back lakes."

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

JUBILEE CAMPING CHORUS.

BY L. A. MORRISON, TORONTO.

When the vernal days are done,
And the sultry summer's sun,
Its langour over nature brings;
Then some pleasant cool retreat
From the city's glare and heat,
Hath health and healing in its wings.

—Chorus.

(Soprano.)—We are sailing glad and free.
(Alto.)—We are sailing, sailing, sailing, sailing, sailing, glad and free.
(Tenor.)—We are sailing glad and free, we are sailing glad and free,
(Bass.)—We are keeping Jubilee, we are keeping Jubilee.

He who made the world so bright,
Full of glad and sweet delight—
Made all His creatures to have rest;
E'en the flowers that deck the dales,
And with fragrance scent the vales
Only by resting bloom their best.

—(Chorus.)

It is not the weary brain,
In its dull methodic strain,
Can flash the thoughts that breathe and burn;
Weary hand and feeble will,
Can with but imperfect skill,
Earth's wondrous gifts to profit turn.

—(Chorus.)

So where Burleigh's Rapids break
In their music o'er the lake
And blend with the ripples on its breast;
Where on all the radiant isles
—Kissed by morning's sunny smiles—
God's brightest benedictions rest:—

—(Chorus.)

Then—refreshed—our nature sings
By the pure enshaded springs
In the lake's embowered groves of green;
And for body, mind and heart,
Gather strength to do life's part
Mid the sweet enchantments of the scene.

—(Chorus.)

ELDER JOHN TAYLOR DEAD.

The President of the Mormons and Successor to Brigham Young.

SALT LAKE, Utah, July 28.—It is announced that John Taylor, President of the Mormon Church, died at 9.05 on Monday evening.

[illegible] which Brigham Young died in 1877, Elder John Taylor succeeded him as head of the Mormon Church, or "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." John Taylor was born at Milnthorp, Westmoreland County, England, in 1808, and was in his eightieth year at the time of his reported death. In his boyhood he received a good education and early in life became a Methodist preacher. When 24 years of age he came to Canada, where his father was settled two years before. Shortly after his arrival he married Miss Leonora Cannon, a Manx lady, who was visiting out there as companion to the wife of the governor. Mr. Taylor soon became conspicuous as a religious teacher and reformer in Toronto, and was associated there with a number of thoughtful men and women who, dissatisfied with the existing forms of religion, were seeking Bible truths by all legitimate means. While this was going on Parley P. Pratt, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Latter Day Saints, visited Toronto, converted several to his belief, among them Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were baptized in the new faith. Mr. Taylor was shortly after ordained an elder, and given charge of the churches in the Canadian and adjacent districts. In a short time he visited the main body of the church to which he allied himself in Kirtland, Ohio. Here he became conspicuous for his real courage in defending the rights of Mormonism and his personal friendship for Prophet Joe Smith. He went with the church to Missouri when he was ordained one of the Twelve Apostles and suffered expulsion with the rest of the Mormons from that state. Then he went with the fugitive Smith to Illinois, assisted in the building of the city of Nauvoo, where he became editor of the Church Journal and Councilor, judge and colonel in the new city militia. Taylor ministered to the brothers Joseph and Hiram Smith in Carthage gaol, and was shot in four places by the mob which assassinated the prisoners. Next he went to England as a missionary and returning in 1847 organized his expedition with Brigham Young which resulted in the founding of the Mormon colony at Salt Lake City. He was also prominent in the formation of the Mormon battalion of 500 men who enlisted to serve in the Mexican war. Subsequent to his arrival in Salt Lake City Taylor was sent on many foreign missions, notably to Great Britain, France and Germany, and in later years published a Mormon paper in New York city. He was elected to many territorial offices in Utah. He was formally elected president of the Mormon church in 1881. President Taylor was a handsome man in his time; with dark complexion, six feet in height, and of commanding carriage. He was an eloquent speaker and a prolific writer on Mormon subjects. Only a year ago he concluded an elaborate doctrinal treatise entitled "An Examination into the Doctrine of the Atonement of Jesus Christ."

CAMPBELLFORD

A MONGREL FISH.—While bathing in the Trent river on Friday last, Arthur McColl saw a fish rise to the surface of the water, and he struck and stunned it, and secured it as it was sinking. The curious little inhabitant of the deep has a head resembling a maskinonge, while the body is slender like an eel's, and scaleless, and a fin like the dorsal fin runs more than half way along the belly. The fish is about fifteen inches in length.

SOUTH AMERICAN BIRDS.—Mr. T. W. Rainie brought to this office on Tuesday last, his collection of South American birds. He has about thirty different species of the most beautiful of the feathered tribe that dwell in the southern groves. Several of the number are humming birds of unsurpassed beauty. The collection are scarlet, and black velvet, and green and blue, yellow and white, all of them having a most brilliant coat of colors. Mr. Rainie brought with him also specimens of the nuts and woods that thrive under the torrid sky, and shells from the sea shore. He was a resident of Venezuela, South America, between four and five years.—Herald.

A TELEGRAPH JUBILEE.

LONDON, July 28.—A telegraph jubilee dinner was given last night to celebrate the triumph of Sir William Fothergill Cooke and Sir Charles Wheatstone, who collaborated in 1837 in the invention of an electric telegraph system, the result of which was the erection in 1838-39 of the first telegraph line in England. The banquet took place at the Holborn Restaurant and was a grand affair. All the notable telegraph men of England were present, and there was also a large attendance of guests renowned in scientific, political, literary and art circles in England, France, Germany and America.

THE LIBERAL UNION.

LONDON, July 28.—The annual meeting of the Liberal Union was held yesterday, Sir Henry James presiding. The annual report announced that, in addition to the 400 working members, there were many others who offered to qualify for admission.

FIGHT WITH BRIGANDS.

ATHENS, July 28.—Turkish troops had a two hours' fight with brigands, yesterday, near Katrina. Ten brigands and two Turks were killed.

M. FERRY AND THE ARMY.

PARIS, July 28.—The Republique Francaise thanks M. Ferry, for his recent speech on the army. Other journals condemn his vehemence, which they say was uncalled for. The Siecle blames M. Ferry for casting insult and ridicule upon the commander of any army corps stationed only two paces from the frontier.

FOR BULGARIA.

LONDON, July 28.—It is affirmed in Sofia that Prince Ferdinand has finally decided to go to Bulgaria at an early date.

THE PROCLAMTION OF THE LEAGUE.

LONDON, July 28.—It is now asserted by persons who are in the confidence of the Chief Secretary for Ireland that the proclamation of the Irish National League will not be promulgated by the Dublin Castle Government until after the adjournment of Parliament.

CONGRESS OF COMMUNES.

PARIS, July 28.—The municipal council has adopted a resolution to invite all the Republican municipalities in France to send delegates to the congress of communes.

SUMMONS HIS TROOPS.

CABUL, July 28.—The Ameer has ordered the enlistment of one in every twenty men to form a corps for service in Afghan Turkistan.

MR. MORLEY'S AMENDMENT.

LONDON, July 28.—Mr. Morley will withdraw his amendment to the Land Bill in favor of a revision of rents.

A BANKRUPT POOR LAW UNION.

DUBLIN, July 28.—The Board of Guardians of Limerick has declared the Poor Law Union bankrupt. Nine thousand pounds is due to contractors for supplies for the poor. The banks have refused to cash the checks of the Union and the rates have not been paid. The Board of Guardians has ordered that a legal action be begun to recover the rates.

BOULANGER SOUVENIRS.

PARIS, July 28.—The Petits Journal says that ninety-four policemen have handed to their superior officers silver watches which they found at their homes. Each watch was engraved with the words "Souvenir Boulanger, July." An enquiry into the matter has been ordered.

INTERNATIONAL CRICKET.

LONDON, July 28.—A game of cricket was begun at Buxton yesterday, between the gentlemen of Derbyshire and the Canadians. The home team made 42 in the first innings and the Canadians 150. In the second innings the English scored 32 for three wickets.

THE CASSAGNAC-LAUR QUARREL.

PARIS, July 28.—M. de Cassagnac has replied to Mr. Laur's letter denouncing him as a coward, and refusing to fight till furnished with proof of M. Laur's assertions, without which he will treat him with contempt.

MR. HEALY SUSPENDED.

LONDON, July 28.—In the House of Commons to-night Mr. Timothy Healy was suspended for a fortnight for telling Mr. Delisle (Conservative) that if he interrupted him again he would break his neck.

Suppressing Bucket Shops.

OTTAWA, July 28.—An active warfare is being carried on against bucket shops here, and in view of the determination of the Chicago Board of Trade the Great North-Western Telegraph Company are removing "tickers" from their establishment. This action has been taken in view of the refusal of the Chicago Board of Trade to furnish quotations to the Western Union should the latter continue to transmit them to the bucket shops. The only way the bucket shops have to secure quotations will be to lease private wires, which will entail great expense, and it is believed many of the smaller firms will have to go out of the business. Several "tickers" were removed today by order of the Telegraph Company.

U. S. Man-of-War Aground.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 28.—The American man-of-war Ossipee, while entering the barbor at nine o'clock this morning, ran ashore on Point Pleasant shoals. She remained aground for over an hour, when a steam tug succeeded in pulling her off. Her bottom is scraped by the rocks, but it is thought there is no serious damage. The ship is now anchored off the city. The weather at the time was perfectly clear, the sky being cloudless, and the sole cause of the accident was that the vessel was out of the proper course.

Post Office Robberies.

KINGSTON, Ont., July 28.—Within a very short time four post offices, Madoc, Campbellford, Shannonville, and Picton, have been broken into by burglars and robbed. It is certain there is a gang of cracksmen in Ontario who direct all their attention to post offices. A Government detective will likely be despatched to investigate the robberies mentioned.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc.

She stamped her foot, in the bitter anguish of her heart. "I told you," she said, "that there must be no more of that. What are you thinking about? From to-day we are dead to each other. I have done with you and you with me. It is your own fault; you should have let me die. Oh, John, John," she wailed out, "why did you not let me die? Why did we not both die? We should have been happy now, or—asleep. We must part, John, we must part; and what shall I do without you? what shall I do?"

Her distress was very poignant, and it affected him so much for a moment he could not trust himself to answer her.

"Would it not be best to make a clean breast of it to Bessie?" he said at last. "I should feel a blackguard for the rest of my life, but upon my word I have a mind to do it."

"No, no!" she cried passionately, "I will not have you do it! You shall swear to me that you will never breathe a word to Bessie. I will not have her happiness destroyed. We have sinned, we must suffer; not Bessie, who is innocent and only takes her right. I promised my dear mother to look after Bessie and protect her, and I will not be the one to betray her—never! never! You must marry her and I must go away. There is no other way out of it."

John looked at her, not knowing what to say or do. A sharp pang of despair went through him as he watched the passionate, pale face and the great eyes dim with tears. How was he to part from her? He put out his arms to take her in them, but she pushed him away almost fiercely.

"Have you no honor?" she cried. "Is it not all hard enough to bear without your tempting me? I tell you it is all done with. Finish saddling that horse, and let us start. The sooner we get off the sooner it will be over, unless the Boers catch us again and shoot us, which for my own part I devoutly hope they may. You must make up your mind to remember that I am nothing but your sister in law. If you will not remember it, then I shall ride away and leave you to go your way and I will go mine."

John said no more. Her determination was as crushing as the cruel necessity that dictated it. What was more, his own reason and sense of honor approved of it, whatever his passion might prompt to the contrary. As he turned wearily to finish saddling the horse he almost regretted with Jess that they had not both been drowned and got it over.

Of course the only saddles that they had were those belonging to the dead Boers, which was very awkward for a lady. Luckily for herself, however, Jess could, from constant practice, ride almost as well as though she had been trained to the ring, and was even capable of balancing herself without a pommel on a man's saddle, having often and often ridden round the farm in that way. So soon as the horses were ready she astonished John by clambering into the saddle of the older and steadier animal, placing her foot in the stirrup strap and announcing that she was ready to start.

"You had better ride some other way," said John. "It isn't usual, I know, but you will tumble off."

"You shall see," she said, with a little laugh, putting the horse into a canter as she spoke. John followed her on the other horse, and noted with amazement that she sat as straight and steady on her slippery seat as though she were on a hunting saddle, keeping herself from falling by an instinctive balancing of the body which was very curious to notice. When they got well on to the plain they halted to consider their route, and as they did so Jess pointed to the long line of vultures descending to feast on their would-be murderers. If they went down the river it would lead them to Standerton, and there they would be safe if they could get into the town, which was garrisoned by English. But then, as they gathered from the conversation of their escort, Standerton was closely invested by the Boers, and to try and pass through their lines was more than they dared to do. It was true that they still had the pass signed by the Boer general, but after what had occurred they were not unnaturally somewhat skeptical about the value of passes, and certainly unwilling to put their efficacy to the proof. So, after due consideration, they determined to avoid Standerton and ride in the opposite direction till they found a practicable ford of the Vaal. Fortunately, they both of them had a very fair idea of the lay of the land; and, in addition to this, John possessed a small compass fastened to his watch chain, which would enable him to steer a pretty correct course across the veldt—a fact that would render them independent of the roads. On the roads they would run a momentary risk, if not a certainty of detection. But on the wide veldt the chances were that they would meet no living creature except the wild game. Should they come across houses they would be able to avoid them, and their male inhabitants would probably be far away from home on business connected with the war.

Accordingly they rode ten miles or more along the bank without seeing a soul, when they reached a space of bubbling, shallow water that looked fordable. Indeed, an investigation of the banks revealed the fact that a loaded wagon had passed the river at no distant date, perhaps a week before.

"That is good enough," said John; "we will try it." And without further ado they plunged in.

In the center of the stream the water was strong and deep, and for a few yards took the horses off their legs, but they struck out boldly till they got their footing again; and after that there was no more trouble. On the farther side of the river John took counsel with his compass and steered a course straight for Mooifontein. At midday they offsaddled the horses for an hour by some water, and ate a small portion of their remaining food. Then they upsaddled and went on across the lonely, desolate veldt. No human being did they see all that long day. The wide country was only tenanted by great herds of thundering game that came rushing past like squadrons of cavalry, or here and there by coteries of vultures, hissing and fighting furiously over some dead buck. And so at last twilight came on and found them alone in the wilderness.

"Well, what is to be done now?" said John, pulling up his tired horse. "It will be dark in half an hour."

Jess slid from her saddle as she answered, "Get off and go to sleep. I suppose."

TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

Lesson V of the International Series (Third Quarter), for Sunday, July 31. Text of the Lesson, Matt. iv, 1-11. Golden Text, Heb. ii, 18.

V. 1.—The temptation immediately followed the baptism. Led up of the spirit; that is, from the valley of the Jordan.

The Wilderness.—This was probably the wilderness of Judea or Jericho, which extended toward the Jordan. Travelers still speak of it as a dreary place.

V. 2 Fasted forty days.—Luke iv, 2 says "he did eat nothing." This shows that his fasting was as complete as that of Moses or Elijah. His soul was so filled with great and holy thoughts that the body for a time was not subject to the laws of ordinary life.

V. 3. When the tempter came.—There is reason to believe that temptation in some form continued during the whole period of forty days. The temptations named seem to have been the last of a series. They were probably the fiercest of all. If thou be.—This suggests doubt. The words of the Father at the baptism were known to Satan. He did not understand the divinity of Christ fully; but he certainly knew that now his bitterest foe was entering upon his work. Son is here emphatic. The relationship suggested by the word "Son" arrests the attention of the tempter. He would inject doubt into Christ's mind as to God's love to him while suffering thus. It is as if he would say, "God seems to have forgotten you. If you are his Son he would not allow you thus to starve." Command, etc., and you will thus satisfy your hunger and declare also that you are truly the Son of God. This is a temptation to unbelief and to the selfish use of power. The power to change the stones into bread Christ possessed, but that power was an exalted trust; it was to be used for other than merely selfish purposes. Every man who is tempted to use power of whatever kind for other purposes than those for which the power was given is feeling the force of this first temptation. Whoever betrays a trust, whether he be the boy in an office, or a man as the trustee of great amounts and influence, falls before this temptation. Here was an appeal to the lust of the flesh. Whoever yields to drunkenness, gluttony or to vile passions of the body is a victim to this temptation.

V. 4. Christ's reply is sublime. It is written. He did not use divine power to annihilate the tempter. Had he so done, his example would have been worthless to us. He did not argue; one who parleys with Satan is already partly under his power. Man Shall Not Live, etc.—This is one of the profoundest utterances of all literature. He cites from Deut. viii, 3, where Moses, in giving manna, shows the people that life can be sustained, not by bread alone, but by whatever God chose to appoint—whatever comes from his mouth.

V. 5. Then, etc.—Matthew's order is different from Luke's. He places this second temptation last. The words "then" and "again," in Matthew, seem to settle the question as to the true order. There is a connection between the temptations, as given by Matthew, which is valuable. The Devil Taketh Him.—Satan had wonderful power here for a brief space. Did he carry Jesus through the air? We do not know; but in some way Christ went to Jerusalem, and to a pinnacle of the temple—possibly to the side which overlooked the valley of the Kedron.

V. 6. Cast thyself down, etc.—By his former device Satan sees that Jesus has faith in God. He cannot lead Christ to distrust the providence of his Father. This fact gives Satan a hint; perhaps he can lead him to presume on it and so gratify vanity. Jesus quoted scripture in the former temptation; Satan will quote scripture now. This is as if he would say to Christ, Cast thyself down; no harm can come to thee; hath he not said, etc. (Ps. xci, 11, 12). Satan misquoted the passage—he garbled it; he shall "keep thee in all thy ways"—the ways of God's appointment, and so the ways of man's duty he omitted. Satan would make a misapplication of the Scripture. Like many of his followers now, he knew enough Scripture to make this quotation false in spirit and false in form.

V. 7. Again comes Christ's appeal to Scripture—Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. This does one's soul good; it encourages and cheers us in our fierce conflicts with Satan. Christ does not correct his false application of the previous Scripture; he simply makes another quotation, showing that Satan could not be right in his reference to the divine word. Tempt, to put to the proof, to test.

Vs. 8, 9. The third temptation.—The second time Satan is foiled. No longer does he commence with "If thou be," etc. Now he has to deal his master stroke. He will make his appeal at once to what is in most men the most vulnerable point of the soul—the appeal to ambition, in connection with earthly power and glory. He boldly urges Christ to fall down and worship him. High mountain.—What mountain? No one can tell. Some have suggested Nebo, from one summit of which (Pisgah) Moses had his sight of the promised land; some say the Mount of Olives; others, Mount Quarantana. All the kingdoms.—By some striking legerdemain all the kingdoms, not those of Palestine alone, passed in a panoramic vision before Christ. All these, etc.—Satan could not keep this promise. He is a liar, and was such from the beginning. True, there is a sense in which he is "the prince of this world," but not in the sense which his words here suggest.

Vs. 10, 11. Get thee hence.—Triumphant words! Let them ring through the world forever. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God (Deut. 6, 13).—Here is the true rule for every man. Again Christ honors the written word. Satan cowers before his power, and leaves him for a season. His false words may have been often renewed in secret; they were terribly renewed near the awful close of Christ's life; but Satan never forgot that day in the wilderness. Then his crown and his scepter fell. Had the second Adam fallen as did the first, Satan's victory would have been complete, and this wretched world would have been hopeless. Angels came.—Blessed comforters! Christ needed them. He stood between the clashing forces of darkness and light. Satan's time was short, and he was exceeding fierce. How could Christ be tempted? We admit the mystery; we insist on the reality of the temptation. This was no theatrical display; it was a terrific conflict. Satan's kingdom trembled in the balance. As God-man, Christ must be tempted that he might know how to succor the tempted.

POINTS TO BE REMEMBERED.

1. Since Christ was tempted, no man may expect to escape temptation.

2. To us, as to Christ, temptations will come in time of holiest enjoyment and loftiest spiritual enthusiasm.

3. Like Christ, we may overcome. The sword of the spirit is ours, too. If we resist the devil he will flee from us. All who enter heaven enter as conquerors.

4. In the way of duty we may trust God with our hearts; but we must not dare meet Satan alone. Less than a match for Christ, he is more than a match for us.—Sunday School World.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

The fifth annual convention of the International Association of Fairs and Expositions was commenced in Toronto on Wednesday. Between thirty and forty delegates are in attendance.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

They Are Out.

The bills and tickets for the Victoria Rifles band promanade concerts have been issued and all other arrangements have been perfected.

KIDD has a line of Ladies' Kid Boots that he sells below wholesale prices, and no humbugging about it.

Cheese Shipped.

Two car loads of cheese were shipped today, for Hodgson Bros. It was the remainder of the cheese bought at the last market, the other cheese having been shipped on the previous Saturday.

Hard at Work.

The [illegible] demonstration committees, are working steadily. They expect to have the work allotted them performed in ample time and the arrangements generally will be as complete as possible.

Gone North

The summer population at Stoney Lake is being increased daily. More parties went north this morning. Mr. G. M. Roger and Mrs. Alex. Smith, with those in their parties, went up on the morning train and will be located on Juniper Island.

The Grimsby Excursion.

On account of a misunderstanding with one of the railways a change has been made in the fare for the Firemen's excursion. The price of tickets has been reduced, and the excursion will run through to Grimsby for the low fare of $1.75 for the round trip, good for two days. d22

A PAIR of Ladies' Button Boots and a Bottle of Good Polish for 80 cts. at KIDD'S.

The Cheese Box Factory.

The new cheese box factory, which is situated on the Ashburnham raceway, in a portion of the building occupied by Mr. McFadden, will be ready for work next week. Mr. Bickle will, he says, be able to supply the district, and to turn out 2,000 a week if necessary.

Sunday School Picnic.

The annual excursion and picnic of the Mark Street Methodist Church, Ashburnham, took place on Thursday and was largely attended. The party went down the river on the Golden Eye to the new summer resort, Jubilee Park, which is admirably adapted for picnics. At the park the usual sports and amusements were provided, and a pleasant day was spent.

Departed.

Burk's circus, which for two days gave entertainments on the market square, departed this morning. The attendance on the first evening was large, but at the other performances was smaller. There is a quiet company of men with the circus, and a resident on the market square was led to remark that he did not hear a profane expression while the canvas was being taken down.

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

The Plate Glass City Renamed.

The Belleville Ontario thus refers to the arrival of the excursion from here on Wednesday:—"The Peterborough excursion reached here shortly before noon with a good crowd of good looking people from the Railway City and other points." Peterborough has been called the Plate Glass City, on account of its attractive appearance, but Railway City is a very good and appropriate name, denoting business enterprize.

Probably a Fatal Accident.

The Belleville Intelligencer says:—"On Tuesday evening the regular train from Peterborough struck and knocked into the ditch a man who was sitting on the ties near Corby's mills. The train was stopped and the railway employees and others went to the assistance of the injured man, who proved to be Thomas Grier, a painter who lives in that vicinity. It was discovered that he had been struck on the head by the step, which inflicted an ugly wound. Dr. Wilson was sent for and found that Grier had sustained dangerous injury to his right lung. He gives it as his opinion that the patient's recovery is very doubtful."

For delicacy and richness of flavor, use "Royal Extracts."

THE DEBENTURE BY-LAW

Carried by a Small Majority—A Very Small Vote Polled.

The debenture by-law, upon which a vote of the freeholders was taken on Thursday, was carried by a small majority, the vote polled being an exceedingly light one.

The by-law was to raise $20,000, by issuing debentures, for the purpose of constructing bridges of permanent materials on Brock, Simcoe, Charlotte and other streets over the creek; also to provide for the Town's share of the expense of building an iron bridge over the Otonabee river near the locks, south of the town, and to provide for cribwork along Crescent street, leading to the little Lake Cemetery, to preserve the street from being washed away by the action of the water of the Little Lake. The debentures are to run for twenty years, and to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly. A sum of $800 for interest, and $750 for a sinking fund, will be required annually.

The vote shows that very little interest was taken in the fate of the by-law, and that there could not have been a strong feeling of opposition to it. No one would have thought that there was a vote being taken during the day, as it made no stir.

The vote in the different Wards, for and against the by-law, was as follows:—

	For.	Against.
Ward No. 1	10	11
" 2	21	4
" 3	17	12
" 4	6	13
Total	54	40

Majority in favor of the by-law, 14

There were 1,013 persons qualified to vote on the by-law, and of these only 94 went to the polls. The number qualified to vote, and the number of those who voted, in the four wards is shown in the following table:

	On Roll.	Voted.
Ward No. 1	349	21
" 2	169	25
" 3	296	29
" 4	199	19

The Victoria Rifles' Band Concerts.

The programme which will be carried out on Tuesday evening, 9th August, at the A. A. A. grounds will be as follows:—

March ..... "Le Vainqueur" ..... Canivez
Overture ..... "Jeanne Malliotte" ..... Raymond
Waltz ..... "Image de [illegible]" ..... [illegible]
Piccolo Solo ..... "Caprice" ..... [illegible]
Signor Camillo Maggio.
The British Patrol ..... Asch
(The Patrol is heard in the distance, it approaches, passes by and disappears.)
Cornet and Euphonium Duet from Semiramis ..... [Rossini
Messrs. J. Wermenlinger and C. Hastie.
Selection ..... "Elizire de Amore" ..... Donizetti
Descriptive Music—A pleasure trip from Montreal to Peterborough, introducing the whistle, steam, bell, etc.
"Vive La Canadienne."
"God Save the Queen."

In addition to the above the Highland Pipers will give an exhibition of sword dancing, and the Montreal Canton will give an exhibition drill. There will be an entire change of programme for the Wednesday evening concert. Secure your tickets at the book stores. Tickets twenty-five cents. 1d24

The Demonstration Committee Meeting.

All the sub-committees of the I. O. O. F. demonstration committee will meet in Otonabee Lodge room this (Friday) evening at 8 p. m. All members of the Order who are willing to assist in the successful carrying out of the demonstration are cordially invited to be present. There is considerable work to be done, which can only be accomplished by united effort. Let there be a large attendance. 1d24

Education Booming.

The Cobourg World says:—"We had the pleasure of receiving a call yesterday from Mr. R. V. Fowler, B. A., Classical Master Collegiate Institute, Perth; and from Mr. Geo. S. Bean, B. A., Mathematical Master Collegiate Institute, Peterborough. Both gentlemen are highly successful teachers, and report education as booming in their respective towns. They are graduates of Victoria."

Special Excursions.

From Port Hope, Cobourg district, Port Perry, Lindsay, Belleville, Madoc, and Campbellford applications have been received to have special trains run from these points to Peterborough on Aug. 10th. Application for the special trains has been made to the railway authorities and there is every probability of the application being complied with.

Another Splendid Band.

There is a strong probability of the 7th Fusiliers Band, of London, being present to participate in the Oddfellows' demonstration. It will be definitely known whether they will come or not by the beginning of next week. The band is one of the best in the Province.

On His Track.

The police are after a dude that passed through town on his way to the A. C. A camp yesterday. He wore a common red handkerchief about his neck, when he should have read J. J. Sheehy's advertisement about the pure silk ones he is selling at 25 cents each.

Wide Awake.

Port Hope, Cobourg, Madoc and Campbellford have already arranged to have their civic holidays on Aug. 10th, so their people can come to Peterborough to witness the Oddfellows' demonstration on our civic holiday.

One Way of Looking at it.

The small vote polled yesterday on the debentures by-law, makes the cost of the poll average about three dollars a vote.

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

Personal.

Mr. L. A. Morrison and family, of Toronto, are in town on their return trip from Stoney Lake, where they have been for two weeks. They are guests of Mr. Geo. A. Morrison.

The Lindsay Post says:—"Mr. J. D. Flavelle was, on Tuesday night, appointed by the Council as High School Trustee, filling the position made vacant by the resignation of Col. Deacon, County Magistrate. Mr. Flavelle is well and favourably known as an energetic business man and good citizen, and will add to the already good personnel of the Board. He will make an excellent school trustee, and has always taken a warm, liberal and progressive interest in educational matters."

Cheese.

Exceptional firmness is still exhibited in cheese markets throughout the country. In Peterborough 10 cents was paid on last market day. Since then even higher prices have been paid. On Wednesday Ingersol sold as high as 11¾ cents, while New York, though having a great advantage on account of being situated upwards of a thousand miles nearer to the English market, was only quoted at 10¾. This is something which Commercial Union theorists should explain. This is the market which Canadian cheese makers are to make their fortunes out of.

Of Course.

The Port Hope Times of Thursday says:—"It was 95 degrees in the shade in Peterborough yesterday, and only 82 in Port Hope. We extend our sympathies to sweltering Peterborough." Port Hope thermometers have, of course, to be in keeping with everything else in that town, away behind Peterborough.

From the Capital.

Reports from Ottawa indicate that a large number of the people of that city will avail themselves of the cheap rates offered to visit Peterborough and be present at the demonstration on Aug. 9th and 10th.

SATURDAY, JULY 30, 1887.

STABILITY THE REQUISITE.

Mr. W. D. GREGORY, of Toronto, who is described as a pioneer in the movement for free trade relations with the United States, has been interviewed, sent out circulars inviting expressions of opinion as to "Unrestricted Reciprocity," and has published nearly a score of the answers in the Toronto Globe. To render these letters of any great value as an indication of public opinion, it should be known whether in sending the circular there was any selection of persons supposed to be favorable to this agitation, and also whether either Mr. Gregory or the Globe selected from the answers those they thought it expedient to publish. Taking them, however, as we find them, we observe that they are divided, not very unequally, into three classes, those who plainly condemn the movement, those who plainly approve it, and those who, while expressing more or less sympathy, give strong reasons why we should reject it. Of this third class there are four or five who admit that Commercial Union would injure Canadian manufacturers, and as they are certainly right in this it follows that it would injure the whole community, especially the farmers, who would thus find their largest and most valuable market greatly restricted. Another, Mr. A. F. Chamberlain, of Toronto, would support this movement to accept the far higher protective tariff of the United States, because being a Free Trader he hopes that Commercial Union would soon cause protective tariffs to vanish from our continent, a most flagrant non sequeter. Another, Mr. A. L. Baird, of Toronto, believes that Commercial Union would not prove a success if revokable before the expiration of 20 years, because what is chiefly requisite is stability. Well, have Mr. Baird, and others who are inimical to the N.P., given it a fair trial for 20 years? Have they done so for 20 months, for 20 weeks, for 20 days, or even for 20 hours? Was it not their unpatriotic and dishonest aim from the very start to make the policy adopted by the people of Canada a failure if possible, by claiming that it had no stability? As Mr. Baird says, the chief requisite is stability, and therefore this factious opposition to the will of the nation had the partial success of diminishing the good effect of the N.P. by deterring cautious capitalists from risking their money in enterprizes that would not be stable if these rejected politicians could get the chance to overturn them. But having failed to do all the mischief they desired these same political adventurers are now trying a new mode of defeating the N. P. by this artificial agitation for the higher United States tariff. The chief requisite, as Mr. Baird truly says, is stability, and Canada would flourish even more than it has done, if the vanquished opponents of the N.P. would give it the same fair play as British Protectionists gave to Free Trade for forty years.

REMARKS may frequently be heard that it is strange that Canada should require twice as many Cabinet Ministers as the United States, which has twelve times the population. In making this comparison no account is taken of the wide difference between the two countries. The United States Cabinet Ministers are Head Clerks of Departments under an autocratic executive and have not to be ready to explain and justify every detail in their departments before the Legislature to which they are not responsible. Under our system the practice is very different, a much heavier burden is placed upon the shoulders of our Cabinet Ministers, while the people can at once give effect to their wishes without having to wait four years for the next Presidential election, when they can elect a new temporary master.

LORD SALISBURY

Warns his Followers to Prepare for an Early Dissolution of Parliament.

LONDON, July 29.—Lord Salisbury, speaking at Norwich yesterday, warned the Conservative party to prepare for a possible dissolution of Parliament. He said Parliament had often met with an early termination when life seemed unendangered, and that the Conservative party must organize to instruct the people against all description of separatist apostles, who were only too numerous.

THOUGHT HE BURIED HIS SON.

A Strange Sequel to the St. Thomas Railway Disaster.

HASTINGS, Neb., July 29.—James McConlay received, on Sunday last, the body of his only son. Hugh McConlay, who, it was reported, had been killed in the St. Thomas accident two weeks ago. The body was followed to the grave by the sorrowing father, who had been at the point of death since through grief. Yesterday he was astonished to see his son walk into the house alive and well, and then the discovery was made that the body shipped here and buried was that of a young man whose parents live in Canada.

THE PORT AUGUSTA.

Arrival of the Canadian Pacific Steamer at Vancouver.

VANCOUVER, B. C., July 29.—The steamer Port Augusta, Captain Hogg, arrived here at midnight. She left Yokohama, on July 13th at 2 o'clock p. m. She experienced fine weather throught the voyage, but almost continual fog, so that the captain was only able to take two observations. She arrived off land on the morning of the 26th, and had to lay to anchor for two days on account of the fog. She has sixteen passengers and twenty-three Chinees and five Japanees; fourteen bags of mail, a cargo of 42,916 packages of tea and general merchandize. The cargo consists, as follows: Montreal, [illegible] Hamilton, 3333; Winnipeg, [illegible] Vancouver, 38; San Francisco, 1972; Chicago, 10,072; Victoria, 316; New York, 10,529; London, Ont., 534; Kingston, 271; Ottawa, 739; Toronto, 3159; Quebec, 53[illegible]

FATAL FIRE IN CHICAGO.

Several Persons Dead, Dying or Injured —A Fireman Burned.

CHICAGO, July 29.—At 2 40 o'clock this morning fire was discovered in the bakery of Chriss Heffen, Archer Avenue. Shortly after 3 o'clock it was discovered that a number of people living in the building were either dead or dying from the effects of smoke and flames. The firemen and police hurried into the building and soon began bearing out unconscious bodies until eleven people had been removed. Maria Trugo, aged 2 years, was dead, the four surviving Trugo children were almost suffocated, and their recovery is doubtful. Nelson Trugo attempted to lower his wife and two-year-old baby out of the second story window. Capt. Cowan, of Truck H., attempted to rescue them, but a sudden outburst of smoke enveloped them, and the captain, woman and child fell into the flames below. The captain is terribly burned, and is thought to be fatally injured. The mother died a few minutes later.

THE LAND BILL.

Clause Four Adopted—The Wearing Life of a Home Ruler.

LONDON, July 29.—In the House of Commons this evening, on a motion that clause four, as amended stand as a part of the Land Bill, Mr. Dillon moved its rejection. He said the rest of the bill was altered so as to do substantial justice to the tenant the objections to the clause would to some extent be met, but the Parnellites had no assurance that this would be done. Much had been said about the bill taking away the stock-in-trade of the agitation. He would rejoice to see that happen, for a more thankless, cruel, wearing life, than that of the agitators has not yet been discovered.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt considered it a pity that when a message of peace was sent to Ireland the Government chose to infuse into it this drop of bitterness. The clause in question was designed to make ejectment easy. It was a blemish on the bill and the Government would be wise even now to remove it.

Mr. Balfour thought the Government had done everything in equity to prevent evictions being harsh or cruel. If the clause assisted in checking the monstrous system of intimidation which now prevailed in Ireland, it would be a blessing and a source of contentment and prosperity to Ireland.

The motion to retain the clause was carried by a vote of 143 to 111.

THE PREMIER AT NORWICH.

His Speech Intended to Win Over English Landowners.

LONDON, July 29.—Lord Salisbury's speech at Norwich, Wednesday, has created quite a stir. The Premier's utterances were well calculated and obviously intended to win over adherents to the new Tory proposals which are to be brought forward in the promised Irish Land Purchase Bill, and will doubtless, to a certain extent, have that effect. There are thousands of acres of England absolutely barren for want of cultivation, and it was to the owners and would be occupiers of this land that the Prime Minister's address was especially addressed. At present there is no way in which the English land owners can parcel out their unused land on terms that would be advantageous to them and there are very few persons who can afford to become tenants thereof upon the terms which the landlords are compelled to offer, hence Lord Salisbury's promise to extend relief to English landlords equal to that intended to be provided for Irish land owners in the Irish Land Purchase Bill is made with the purpose of appealing to the English land holders to work for the success of the Irish Bill in the expectation of receiving benefits similar to those conferred by that measure. The defeat of the Land Purchase bill would put an end to the hopes of relief entertained by the English landlords, many of whom have become poor, and they are given so to understand.

LATEST CABLE NEWS.

THE C. P. R. ROUTE.

LONDON, July 29.—The Canadian Pacific offer was submitted yesterday to Mr. Goschen, Chancellor of Exchequer, who is considering the question. The whole case is now before the Government, and the strong point urged is the saving in time and money which would be effected by the Pacific mail route.

ACCIDENT TO SS. TRAAVE.

LONDON, July 29.—While the steamer Traave, which arrived at Bremen on July 22 from New York, was discharging on Monday night, she heeled over. Two ports leading to the engine room were open, and through these the water entered the steamer at 3.30 o'clock in the morning. It was discovered that there were several heurs of water in the cabin. Several hours pumping averted the danger to the steamer.

CHARGED WITH WIFE POISONING.

LONDON, July 29.—Dr. Cross, a wealthy retired army surgeon and a well known member of society in Ireland, has been arrested in Cork on the charge of having murdered his wife by gradual poisoning. The wife's remains were exhumed five weeks after the interment, and upon an analyzation, poison was found. Dr. Cross married his family governess a fortnight after his wife's death.

RUSSIAN FINANCE.

BERLIN, July 29.—The Post, replying to a newspaper article on Russian finance, declares that the German onslaught against Russian securities was caused by the ukase of March 26, which shook the foundation of Germany's confidence in the security of property, real or personal, in Russia. Public discussion, says the paper, has disclosed the questionable character of Russian credit. Had the ukase not been issued Russia might possibly still enjoy the blind and undeceived confidence of German investors.

THE CASS ENQUIRY.

LONDON, July 29.—The Cass enquiry ends in a muddle. One journal declares it has vindicated Miss Cass' character, while another insists that Miss Cass' character stands just where it did before it began.

A BANQUET.

LONDON, July 29.—Mr. John Bright has consented to preside at the banquet to be given by the Unionists to Lord Hartington.

THE GOODWOOD STAKES.

LONDON, July 29.—The Goodwood stakes were won by Somer's Carlton, Beaver 2nd, Stanislas 3rd.

MR. BRIGHT'S ADVICE.

LONDON, July 29.—Mr. John Bright has written a letter advising the electors of the Bridgeton division of Glasgow to vote for Mr. Evelyn Ashley, Conservative, who is running against Sir George Trevelyan, the Liberal candidate, in the contest for the vacant seat in Parliament for that district.

RUSSIAN CREDIT.

BERLIN, July 29.—The Zeitung of this city, which has up to this time tried to allay the suspicion which has risen against Russian credit, says:—"It would have been better if the Journal de St. Petersburg in its article on the crusade of the German press against Russian securities had been able to state that all rumors regarding the negotiations of Russia for a new loan were incorrect, but this declaration was cautiously avoided, like the well grounded complaints of Russia's hostile attitude towards Germany." The Faankfort Zeitung has advices from St. Petersburg, which reaffirms the reports of the endeavor on the part of Russia to negotiate a loan in Paris. Other Russian advices refer to a proposal to promote the introduction of gold and arrest the depreciation of Russian paper. They also allude to a scheme to prevent commercial travellers doing business in Russia and assert that this measure is directed principally against the Germans, who are the chief competitors of the Russians.

BERESFORD NOT TO GO.

LONDON, July 29.—The Queen has refused to accept the resignation of Lord Charles Beresford as Junior Lord of the Admiralty.

GREAT OIL FIRE IN RUSSIA.

ST. PETESSBURG, July 29.—The fire in the Naptha store houses at Balachna has at last been extinguished. One million pounds of naptha were burned.

A NATIONAL WHISKEY DEAL.

BERNE, July 29.—Pursuant to the new spirit monopoly law the Government has purchased alcohol sufficient for the whole country for one year's consumption.

THE CABINET.

LONDON, July 29.—A great many persons are disappointed over the certainty that as matters now stand the Cabinet will not be reconstructed until next fall. It is understood that the programme as now arranged, subject of course to such modifications as may be made necessary by intervening circumstances, involves the addition of four Unionists to the Ministry and the elevation of three of the retiring members to the peerage, the fourth, Mr. Matthews, retiring with no greater reward than an empty vote of thanks and expressions of the high appreciation of his services entertained by his colleagues. The disappointment felt at the delay in rearranging the Cabinet is mainly confined to the Unionists, who, disheartened and humiliated at the result of the recent elections, are clamoring for some tangible reward for their adherence to the Tory cause at the expense of public condemnation when it would have been impossible for the Tories to retain power without their support.

A SISTER'S DEVOTION.

LONDON, July 29.—The release of George Bidwell, the Bank of England forger who, in 1882, was sentenced to imprisonment for life is unprecedented in the romance attaching to the circumstances of his discharge. The pardon of this now famous criminal was effected through the unceasing efforts of a devoted sister who spent five years in trying to obtain her brother's liberty and so various were the means she employed and so persistent her endeavors, that she became almost an incubus of every official whose action or influence could have any possible effect in the direction of consummating her purpose. How she finally accomplished her object nobody appears to know. The police officials declare that they are entirely in the dark as to the secret of her success, but all agree that Bidwell's discharge was brought about solely through her efforts and that her self-sacrificing devotion to her brother has no parallel in the records or traditions of English prisons or police departments.

SEQUEL TO A MURDER TRIAL.

LONDON, July 29.—A curious sequel of the Pranzini trial is reported from Paris. Pranzini's lawyer affirmed that the murderer spent the evening of the murder with a lady of position, whose name and honor prevented him from publishing it. It will be remembered that the judge solemnly summoned this person, if she was in existence, to come forward, and thereupon a gang of sixteen ingenious persons formed a little plan for levying blackmail on two ladies well known in Parisian society under the threat of divulging the names of one of them as that of the lady in question. They tried to interest a princess in their scheme, but the affair got into the hands of the police and they are now all in custody.

A RIOT AT LIMERICK.

LIMERICK, July 29.—Seven men have been arrested for participating in the riot yesterday of the striking dockmen against the imported Waterford laborers. Four policemen and many civilians were injured during the riot. The Mayor declares he will call troops to the aid of the police if the rioting is renewed.

Horsfords Acid Phosphate.

IN DIGESTIVE DISORDERS.

Dr. E. V. Wright, Saratoga Springs, New work, says: "I have used it for years, and my experience has proved beyond question that the peculiar combination of phosphates renders it most valuable in the treatment of digestive disorders."

Extensive Fires.

LONDON, Ont., July 29.—Fires are raging fiercely along the St. Clair and Michigan Central railway. Fences for miles are burned, while tamarac a swamp at Inwood during the past two days is all ablaze.

A Hard Character Shot.

TORONTO, July 29.—George Stevent, a hard character, who recently escaped from the Central Prison, Toronto, was shot yesterday near the International Bridge, Fort Erie, on the Canadian side. The murderer was Peter Nettle, a farmer, who acted in self-defence.

The Hodgson Released.

HALIFAX, July 29.—A despatch from Shelburne states that the schooner Hodgson has sailed for sea, having been released by the Collector of Customs. It is not known what agreements have been made respecting the expenses, payment of which was demanded by the collector.

Salvation Army Wedding.

St. John, N. B., July 29.—Adjutant Southall, of Halifax, were married here last night to Capt. Jennie Langtry, of Toronto, in the presence of four thousand people. Both are officers of the Salvation Army, and the services were performed by Commissioner Coombes and Rev. Dr. Pope.

Another Railway Accident.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M., July 29.—An accident occurred on the Atlantic and Pacific road on Wednesday evening. As a west bound freight was approaching Franconia station the trains plunged at full speed into an arroya, the bridge over which took fire and was burned. The fireman was instantly killed, the engineer and brakeman fatally injured. The wrecked cars caught fire and burned; loss, $90,000.

An Affecting Scene.

ST. LOUIS, July 29.—Samuel N. Brooks, of Hyde, England, yesterday visited his condemned son in the city gaol. The meeting was very affecting. Maxwell almost collapsed at the sight of his father, and when he recovered sufficiently to carry on a conversation, an interview began that did not terminate for two hours. Maxwell frequently shed tears, while his father's bowed head told of the agony in his heart. The execution is set for August 26th, and in the interval the father will make every effort to secure a stay.

Remains of Fire Victims.

MONTREAL, July 29.—It was a sad sight to-day to see a solitary barrel on Dumaine & Hapin's waggon starting from the ruins of the St. Lawrence sugar refinery. In the barrel were the human remains found in the ruins this morning. They will await at the morgue the coroner's permit of burial. All the remains so far found, apparently those of four men, have been taken to the Mount Royal Cemetery vault until all the remains under the ruins will have been recovered. Then the coroner will have them all buried in one grave, and erect a headpiece over it with the inscription, "The Victims of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refinery Fire," with date and whatever names may become certain. The remains are all charred and crushed to a degree that they are absolutely unrecognizable.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc.

She was quite right; there was absolutely nothing else that they could do; so John set to work and hobbled the horses, tying them together for further security, for it would be a dreadful thing if they were to stray. By the time that this was done the twilight was gathering into night, and the two sat down to contemplate their surroundings with feelings akin to despair. So far as the eye could reach there was nothing to be seen but a vast stretch of dreary plain, across which the night wind blew in dreary gusts, making the green grass ripple like the sea. There was absolutely no shelter to be had, nor anything to break the monotony, unless it were a couple of ant heaps about five paces apart. John sat down on one of the ant heaps and Jess took up her position on the other, and there they remained, like pelicans in the wilderness, watching the daylight fade out of the day.

"Don't you think that we had better sit together?" suggested John, feebly. "It would be warmer, you see."

"No, I don't," answered Jess, snappishly. "I am very comfortable as I am."

Unfortunately, however, this was not the exact truth, for poor Jess' teeth were already chattering with cold. Soon, indeed, they found that the only way to keep their blood moving was, weary as they were, to continually tramp up and down. After an hour and a half or so of this, the breeze dropped and the temperature got more suitable to their lightly clad, half starved and almost exhausted bodies. Then the moon came up, and the hyenas, or wolves, or some such animals, came up also and howled round them—though they could not see them. These hyenas proved more than Jess' nerves could stand, and she at last condescended to ask John to share her ant heap; there they sat, shivering in each other's arms, throughout the livelong night.

Another drawback to their romantic situation was that they were positively soaked by the falling dew. There they sat, or rather cowered, for hour after hour without sleeping, for sleep was impossible, and almost without speaking; and yet, notwithstanding the misery of their circumstances, not altogether unhappy, since they were united in their misery. At last the eastern sky began to turn gray, and John rose and shook the dew from his hat and clothes, and limped off as well as his half frozen limbs would allow, to catch the horses, which were standing together some yards away, looking huge and ghostlike in the mist. By sunrise he had managed to saddle them up, and they started once more. This time, however, he had to lift Jess on to the saddle.

About 8 o'clock they halted and ate their little remaining food, and then proceeded slowly enough, for the horses were almost as tired as they were, and it was necessary to husband them if they were to reach Mooifontein by dark. At midday they halted for an hour and a half, and then, feeling almost worn out, went on once more, reckoning that they could not be more than sixteen or seventeen miles from Mooifontein. It was about two hours after this that a catastrophe happened. The course they were following ran down the side of one land wave, then across a little swampy sluit, and up on the opposite slope. They crossed the swampy ground, walked their horses up to the crest of the opposite rise, and found themselves face to face with a party of armed and mounted Boers.

CHAPTER XXXI.

JESS FINDS A FRIEND.

The Boers swooped down on them with a shout, like a hawk on a sparrow. John pulled up his horse and drew his revolver.

"Don't, don't!" cried Jess; "our only chance is to be civil;" whereon, thinking better of the matter, he replaced it, and wished the leading Boer good day.

"What are you doing here?" asked the Dutchman; whereon Jess explained that they had a pass—which John promptly produced—and were proceeding to Mooifontein.

"Ah, Om Crofts?" said the Boer as he took the pass; "you are likely to meet a burying party there," and at the time Jess did not understand what he meant. He eyed the pass suspiciously all over, and then asked how it came to be stained with water.

Jess, not daring to tell the truth, said that it had been dropped into a puddle. The Boer was about to return it, when suddenly his eye fell upon Jess' saddle.

"How is it that the girl is riding on a man's saddle?" he asked. "Why, I know that saddle; let me look at the other side. Yes, there is a bullet hole through the flap. That is Swart Dirk's saddle. How did you get it?"

"I bought it from him," answered Jess, without a moment's hesitation. "I could get nothing to ride on."

The Boer shook his head. "There are plenty of saddles in Pretoria," he said, "and these are not the days when a man sells his saddle to an English girl. Ah! and that other is a Boer saddle, too. No Englishman has a saddle cloth like that. This pass is not sufficient," he went on, in a cold tone; "it should have been countersigned by the local commandant. I must arrest you."

Jess began to make further excuses, but he merely repeated, "I must arrest you," and gave some orders to the men with him.

"We are in for it again," she said to John; "and there is nothing for it but to go."

"I shan't mind so much if only they will give us some grub," said John, philosophically. "I am half starved."

"And I am half dead," said Jess, with a little laugh. "I wish they would shoot us and have done with it."

"Come, cheer up, Jess," he answered; "perhaps the luck is going to change."

She shook her head with the air of one who expects the worst, and then some gay young spirits among the Boers came up and made things pleasant by an exhibition of their polished wit, which they chiefly exercised at the expense of poor Jess, whose appearance was, as may well be imagined, exceedingly wretched and forlorn; so much so that it would have moved the pity of most people. But these specimens of the golden youth of a simple pastoral folk found in it a rich mine of opportunities. They asked her if she would not like to ride straddle legged, and if she had bought her dress from an old Hottentot who had done with it, and if she had been rolling about tipsy in the veldt to get all the mud on it; and generally availed themselves of this unparalleled occasion to be witty at the expense of an English lady in sore distress. Indeed, one gay young dog, called Jacobus, was proceeding from jokes linguistic to jokes practical. Perceiving that Jess only kept her seat on the man's saddle by the exercise of a curious faculty of balance, it occurred to him that it would be a fine thing to upset it and make her fall upon her face. Accordingly, with a sudden twist of the rein he brought his horse sharply against her wearied animal, nearly throwing it down; but she was too quick for him, and saved herself by catching at the mane. Jess said nothing; indeed, she made no answer to her tormentors, and fortunately John understood very little of what they were saying. Presently, however, the young Boer made another attempt, putting out his hand to give her a sly push; and, as it happened, John saw it, and the sight of the indignity made the blood boil in his veins. Before he could reflect on what he was doing he was alongside of the man, and, catching him by the throat, had hurled him backward over his crupper with all the force of scald command. The man fell heavily upon his shoulders, and instantly there was a great hubbub. John drew his revolver, and the other Boers raised their rifles, and Jess thought that there was an end of it, and put her hand before her face, having first thanked John for avenging the insult with a swift flash of her beautiful eyes. And, indeed, in another second it would have been all over had not the elder man who had taken the pass interposed; the fact being that he had witnessed the proceedings that led to his follower's discomfiture, and, being a decent man at bottom, had disapproved of them.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Live Stock.

The Montreal Gazette's Liverpool correspondent writes as follows respecting the situation of the English live stock market:

The opinion is that things have come to the worst, and from this out better trade will prevail. Unfortunately for our exporters there will be no betterment for them, because they will have thrown up the sponge and retired, beaten but not disgraced. I was going to add as well that they were not dis eartened, but candidly I believe a good many of them are pretty sick at heart. Such a run of heard luck has never been known before, and I hope will never be experienced again. There may be a time that will put all the losses square yet, but it will be when freights and stocks can be dealt in without taking extraordinary long chances. Let shippers profit by the losses made this season and avoid gambling on "futures" for space. The same troubles surround the Yankee exporter, for I heard of one big shipment lying round in lairges until the ten days expired before ever they were broken in on. Of course the drafts were way in excess of the values, as markets stood, and no sane man would run the risk of dropping, say $10,000, on one shipment. How the matter was finally arranged has not transpired, but the animals were knocked down and disposed of to best advantage for behoof of whom it may concern.

OVER WORKED Women.

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "cure-all," but admirably fulfills a single purpose, being a most potent agent for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

A large treatise on Diseases of Women, profusely illustrated with colored plates and numerous wood-cuts, sent for 10 cents in stamps. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

SICK HEADACHE, Bilious Headache, and Constipation, promptly cured by Dr. Pierce's Pellets. 25c. a vial, by druggists.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

The Duffers and Buffers.

The Duffers and Buffers had another cricket match on the P. A. A. A. grounds on Friday. The Buffers won by a score of 92 to 81.

Shooting.

A weekly rifle practice was held at the range on Thursday. Seven riflemen attended and fairly good scores were made. Mr. G. Fitzgerald headed the list with 68.

For Summer Days.

The "Grip Sack," issued from Grip office, has been received. It contains a large amount of humorous reading and a number of illustrations of Grip's well known standard.

Interprovincial Cricket.

A cricket match between teams representing Ontario and Quebec commenced at Toronto yesterday. Ontario made 114 in the first innings and Quebec 46. Ontario had scored 50 for 5 wickets when play stopped for the day. Messrs. Max. Hamilton and B. T. A. Bell are on the Quebec team.

Committee Meeting.

A large meeting of the Oddfellows' Demonstration Committee was held on Friday evening. A large amount of detail work was done. The officials to take charge of the Driving Park entertainment were all appointed. From present prospects there is every probability of the coming demonstration eclipsing anything ever attempted in Peterborough before.

Recreation Day.

The best excursion of the season will be run on Thursday, August 4th, by the Peterborough Fire Brigade to Grimsby Park. As the above day will be "Recreation Day" at the Park a programme has been prepared consisting of games at lawn tennis and croquet, ladies' and gentlemen's rowing matches, and a pyrotechnical display in the evening. Tickets for the round trip $1.75, good for two days. d22

KIDD has a line of Ladies' Kid Boots that he sells below wholesale prices, and no humbugging about it.

Court of Revision.

A session of the Court of Revision was held on Friday evening, His Honor Judge Weller presiding. The two cases before the Court were those of the Water Company and Elias Burnham. In the first case the assessment was reduced from $3,250 to $450 Mr. Moore appeared for the Town and Mr. Hatton for the Water Company. Mr. Burnham's assessment was reduced from $6,900 to $5,200. Mr. C. W. Sawers appeared for the appellant. In the Water Company's case Mr. Ketchum, barrister, of Colborne, presided, on account of Judge Weller being a stockholder in the Water Company.

The Crops.

The Mail publishes crop reports from over the Province. From Peterborough County it has the following:—

"Havelock.—Fall wheat, average crop; spring, good toward the west, very poor east. Barley, very poor through these parts. Oats, nothing extra. Corn, rushing. Roots, average crop. Apples, scarce an. average crop. Other fruits not very good

"Westwood.—Fall wheat, winter killed, fair crop; spring, short with drouth, fair crop. Barley, very fair but short. Oats, fair. Peas, poor from dry weather. Roots, good prospects now. Apples and other fruits, very fair."

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

What this Town is Noted For.

The Dominion Oddfellow says:—"Peterborough is no mean city. It has long been noted for its fine buildings, beautiful streets and generally attractive surroundings. It boasts, perhaps, more solid wealth than any other town in Ontario of its population, and its local newspapers are second to none anywhere in this broad Dominion. We are sure from what is known of the place and people, all who attend the meetings of the Grand Lodge will receive a right hearty welcome from the brethren and citizens of Peterborough, and carry away with them when they depart pleasing recollections of their visit."

STEALING FRUIT.

SATURDAY, July 30.—Three boys, G. H. McWilliams, T. Holdaway and T. D. Tully were marched before his Worship this morning by Mr. E. Green, who charged them with stealing apples from his garden.

HIS WORSHIP—Well boys, do you plead guilty or not guilty?

BOYS—Guilty.

HIS WORSHIP—How many apples did you take?

1ST BOY—I took three off the ground.

HIS WORSHIP—Three; and how many did you take?

2ND BOY—I took four.

HIS WORSHIP—Three and four are seven; and how many did you take?

3RD BOY—I took two.

HIS WORSHIP—Nine; all on the ground I suppose?

BOYS—Yes, sir.

HIS WORSHIP (sarcastically)—Well, I suppose you thought you were doing just right to break into this man's garden? If your pa had a nice orchard and you saw a lot of boys stealing the fruit you would say the boys were doing what was right wouldent you?

BOYS (meekly)—No sir.

MR. GREEN—These boys broke the trees, your Worship, as well as stealing the apples.

HIS WORSHIP (with firmness)—You have broken the law when you had no business to. You will be fined, but I will let you off light this time. I'll fine you $1 each.

Master McWilliams paid his dollar. The other two have the option of paying on Monday or going to goal for two days.

DISORDERLY.

T. Sadalier was up for being disorderly. He had no money to pay a fine with, and as he was going to Burleigh to work the Magistrate let him go.

ECHOES FROM THE LAKE.

A Large Number of Campers—The A. C. A. Store.

The campers are going to Stoney Lake daily in large numbers. Already a great many of the most available sites have been taken up.

The A. C. A. Camp store is doing a good business. Messrs. A Elliott and Gus. Sawers attend to the wants of the camping community. Mr. Elliott also acts as Postmaster. The store contains everything needed in the way of provisions for campers.

Around the camp store there is a constant knot of slouch hats and all of the gossip of the lake centres here. Bob. Kingan, who went up on Thursday, got sunburned before five hours. He went up to see how Andy Mercer, Fred. Cox and the rest of the boys were making things go. He found them in a fine camp pitched in a commanding location, looking first rate. The two Brick boys are also looking healthy. They are the favorites with the ladies. Frank Kingan left the camp for town on Wednesday. Some of them said he was mad because the people up there didn't appreciate his special hair cut enough. He paid a full quarter for it and the barber says it was ordered three weeks ago. Vernon Halliday and friends are camped in a convenient place to the camp headquarters.

The houses are nearly all occupied, from those of Messrs. McClelland and Lech, a short distance from entering the lake to away up at Boshink where Mr. A. Hall and family reside.

Rice Lake.

Parties wanting a pleasure sail cannot do better than take the steamer Golden Eye, which leaves the C.P.R. wharf at 7.30 a. m., and get landed at Jubilee Point, where there are tables for dining on, a spring of water, and the best of fishing. Those wishing to take a sail on the lake, can continue on to Idyl Wild. Meals are provided on the boat, or at Idyl Wild, for 25 cents. This beautiful trip can be enjoyed for 75 cents return tickets. Special arrangements for parties of 20 (twenty). d25

Removal to Toronto.

Miss Veals desires to announce to the many friends of her school in Peterborough that she has made arrangements to succeed Mrs. Nixon in Toronto, where she will re-open in September. While thanking them for the very warm support they have given her during her nine years residence among them, she would express the hope that those parents who desire the advantages of a city for their daughters, will be pleased to entrust them to her care.

Church News.

The Rev. I. Tovell will preach at Warsaw to-morrow.

The Rev. Mr. Bailey, of Warsaw, will occupy the Rev. Mr. Tovell's pulpit in exchange.

The Rev. Mr. Carmichael, of Columbus, Ont., will preach in St. Paul's Church.

The Rev. Mr. McKay, of Toronto, will preach in the Baptist Church, Murray street.

Riverside.

The Riverside team to play the Orillias on Monday will be picked from the following players:—E. Rodgers, A. Rose, F. Pakenham, A. Butler, T. Meagher, F. Larone, R. H. Henderson, J. Phelan, J. Begley, T. Duncan, H. Neil, J. Murphy, and M. Halpin.

Consumption Can be Cured

By proper, healthful exercise, and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, which contains the healing and strengthening virtues of these two valuable specifics in their fullest form. Dr. D. D. McDonald, Petticodiac, N.B., says: "I have been prescribing Scott's Emulsion with good results. It is especially useful in persons with consumptive tendencies." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

Smallpox in Cuba.

HAVANA, July 29.—A letter from Santiago de Cuba says smallpox is still ravaging that city. Neither rank, sex nor age escapes the scourge. The number of persons thus far attacked reaches nearly a thousand, the number of deaths daily averaging about fourteen.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It will do you good. Sold by all Druggists. 50.

Mackerel are reported to be plentiful on the coast of Prince Edward Island.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer, it produces natural, quiet sleep. By relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes 'as bright as a button.' It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

GLADSTONE HOPEFUL.

The Influence of Pending Elections—A Letter from Mr. Chamberlain.

LONDON, July 30.—Hon. Jos. Chamberlain adds a letter to the "round table" controversy, in which he says:—"Secondly the Unionists have nothing beyond Sir Wm. Vernon Harcourt's opinion that the cardinal points of difference between the Liberals and Unionists might be put in a fair way of settlement before the Liberal-Radical union."

Mr. Gladstone's remarks were largely devoted to the influence of the pending elections, in the direction of undermining the position of the dissidents and persuading the Liberals who abstained from voting in the last general election. He reminded his audience that the reunion of the Liberal party must be looked upon as far distant, although he acknowledged the sincerity of Lord Hartington's desire to restore the party if possible. "But," he continued, "we must look the situation plainly in the face. The seventy dissidents constitute the wing of the Tory army—in fact, more than the wing, because if instead of them seventy genuine Tories had been returned to Parliament, the Tory Government would never have ventured to carry the measures disastrously memorable—measures that have been carried under the guise of shadowing Liberal approval, and which would have been absolutely unnecessary had the Government made the concessions now contained in the Land Bill in September last when Parnell urged them. The bye-elections indicated that the absentees at the general elections are now decidedly in favor of a policy of justice towards Ireland."

BOULANGER AND FERRY.

Prospects of a Duel Between the Soldier and the Statesman.

LONDON, July 30.—General Boulanger's challenge to M. Jules Ferry has created a great sensation in Paris and is much talked of in London. The prevailing belief in both capitals is that M. Ferry will refuse to fight on the ground that it would be against public policy for him to engage in a combat with an officer as peculiarly situated as is General Boulanger. It is not easy to see, however, how he can take refuge behind this specious plea. M. Ferry is himself a discredited man, and the circumstances of his retirement from the office of prime minister are immeasurably less creditable to him than the series of incidents which led to the banishment of General Boulanger are to that officer. M. Ferry was forced into retirement by his own acts. General Boulanger was driven from office and consequently from Paris by the acts of men who were jealous of his growing popularity and consequent increasing strength. There does not seem to be any way by which M. Ferry can avoid a meeting with General Boulanger except through an ample apology to the man he has gratuitously insulted, or a tacit admission that he is a coward. M. Ferry went a long distance out of his way to insult General Boulanger in his speech at Epinal, and even the enemies of the latter recognize the justice of his prompt demand for satisfaction.

Brandon's Jubilee Celebration.

WINNIPEG, July 30.—Yesterday Brandon celebrated its Jubilee day. A trades procession was one of the features of the programme. The city band headed the procession, and after this was a carricature of the Red River Valley Railroad with a representation of what its usefulness will be to the west. The outfit was an old threshing machine engine drawn by a team of old horses, a mule and an ox, with a couple of drags for cars with suitable signs displayed, the whole guarded by a small regiment of soldiers. Following this came men and women on stilts, a Southern plantation ball room on wheels, masked characters, and a full consignment of Indians on ponies which brought up the rear. In the afternoon there were baseball and lacrosse tournaments, Moffat, of Montreal, carried off nearly all first prizes in the races. The 90th lacrosse team arrived in time to take part in the sports and left for Souris last night to play the Plum Creeks for the championship.

EUROPE'S BANTAM STATE.

Switzerland Will Rely on Her Own Strength for Independence.

GENEVA, July 30.—At the opening of the International rifle meeting here a speech was made by Mr. Droz, the president of the federal council. He said that owing to the wisdom of the leading European cabinets peace was now assured. The nations of Europe did not wish to go to war; they desired to develop their resources in peace The people of Switzerland had been foremost in maintaining peace. At the same time it was their duty to make every sacrifice in order to preserve the independence of the country. The government of Switzerland would constantly endeavor to preserve the neutrality of the country, not relying upon treaties only but upon their own strength and energies. He therefore urged the citizens of Switzerland to be assiduous in improving military training; to add such training to the education of the youth, to hold rifle contests and to perfect their drill, all of which work should be animated by a free, fraternal spirit.

MR. HEALY'S SUSPENSION.

A Pathetic Incident Marks His Leaving the House of Commons.

LONDON, July 30.—The suspension of Mr. Timothy M. Healy from the privileges of the floor of the House of Commons, Thursday night, was marked by a pathetic incident. Although Mr. Healy, in the heat of his indignation and anger, defied the Speaker to do his worst, and expressed the hope that none of his friends would endeavour to mitigate the enviable verdict of his political enemies, he broke down completely as he turned to leave the chamber, a disgraced man in the eyes of the majority of the members, and sobbed convulsively. The excessive mental and physical strain which Mr. Healy has undergone since the beginning of the discussion of the Coercion bill in Committee has completely unnerved him, and his friends are convinced that his enforced absence from the excitement of Parliamentary duties for a fortnight, will prove beneficial to him. No other man in the Parnellite party has assumed so large a share of the burden of opposition to the Government's Irish measures as Mr. Healy.

FORTUNES AT THE SAULT.

Farm Property Nets Handsome Sums for its Owners.

The Detroit News, in an article upon the boom at Sault Ste Marie, says:—"The man who has profited most by this sudden advance is Thomas Ryan, an Irishman, who had considerable property on both sides of the river before the boom. His possessions were rather a drain than a profit to him. His first sale was of a plot for the site of the new Fort Bradley to the United States Government for $12,000. That set him on his feet, and enabled him to resist the seductions of the charmers who sought to buy from him on the advance. To-day Ryan is worth perhaps $200,000, half of it in good investments, the rest in what is to-day fine property. His son, to whom he transferred some of his holdings when they amounted to little, has also made a boodle out of the advance. A namesake, Wm. Ryan, is fully $30,000 ahead of the deal. Mr. Trelize has made $35,000 out of little or nothing, while a citizen named Grend, who had a homestead of 80 acres near town, has made $50,000 out of what might have been worth one-fifth that sum two years ago."

PIRATICAL BEHAVIOUR.

How Gloucester Fishermen Steal Bait from Canadians.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 30.—Many Canadian bank fishing vessels complain of the outrageously piratical behaviour of Gloucester fishermen this season. Finding themselves placed at such a disadvantage when our trawlers come on the same ground with them, having fresh bait, and the fish leave their salt clam or other stale bait for the fresh baited Canadian hook, they adopt the tactics they have so successfully practised in Canadian waters when in search of mackerel or bait, and steal the bait from Canadian fishermen's trawls. The names of two of the robbers on the high seas will be forwarded to the Minister of Fisheries, with all the proofs necessary for a judicial investigation. The schooners Pieroma, and Torridon, had on their recent trip the fish stolen from their trawls, the hooks stripped from off others and from others the buoys were stolen, letting the trawls go. There are now in this port two American fishermen. They came in, they say, for water. The one is from Gloucester direct, and the other belongs to Booth Bay, nine days from this port. He has been on the Canso bank, and did well till some Prospect schooners came on the ground with fresh squib from Canso, since which salt clams "was wus 'an pisen; so we calculated we'd better come to Canso and get water to soak 'em in," which being interpreted means, to steal a squib baiting. This case is a representative one.

CANSO, N.S., July 30.—The Government ss. Acadia, with Admiral Scott on board, on the lookout for certain vessels guilty of the brutal outrage of running away from their crews, leaving them in a very critical condition, paid us a visit to-day. The celebrated United States war steamer Yantic, that was afraid to fire a salute, preceded the Acadia an hour or so, coming up the bay presumably in search of the delinquents, to lend them a helping hand in the shape of a tow line in getting out of the reach of the enemy outside the three mile limit. Capt. Smith, of the schooner Pieroma, saw a schooner with one seine boat on deck and only four men working her, stand in out of the fog last evening, making for White Point. She immediately backed ship and stood off to sea. The Pieroma's crew remarked how strange it was that seiner should be so light handed. It was doutless the escaping poacher, Jonas H. French.—Montreal Star.

Hanlan and Teemer to Row.

TORONTO, July 30.—Hanlan has accepted Teemer's challenge to row a three mile race for $1,000 a side, the race to be rowed on Toronto Bay, August 12th or 13th. Hanlan sails for Australia on August 15th to row Beach.

1,700 MILES IN A CANOE.

An Extended Pastoral Visit in a Birch Bark.

Last week Mgr. Lorrain, Bishop of Cythere and Vicar Apostolic of Pontiac, returned to Montreal, accompanied by his secretary, Rev. Abbe J. B. Proulx, the Revs. Guegen and Dozais and Brother Tremblay. Monseigneur had been on a pastoral visit to the Indian missions on the Upper Ottawa, Rupert's Land and the Upper St. Maurice. His route was from Ottawa via Pembroke to Lakes Temiscamingue, Obaching, Kepewa, etc., thence to the source of the River du Moine; from here through a chain of lakes to the Lac Barriere mission, now on Lake Wapous; thence to Lake Wassepatebi, lying between the Province of Quebec and Rupert Land; through Cypress Lake, River Pekeskak, by a chain of five lakes, the Laloche River to Lake Waswanipi. The return trip was made by the same route as far as Lake Waswanipi, to the Mekiskan River and the Upper waters of the St. Maurice, thence through various lakes, Lake Long, Lake Coucoucache and others to the Grand Piles. This involved a trip of 1,700 miles mostly by water in bark canoes, occupying two months and six days, and 1,172 miles being travelled by canoe. The portages were from an arpent to four miles long, and there were 157 of them. The party slept for 50 nights in tents or in Indian huts. Thirty-five infant baptisms, five adult baptisms, 16 marriages, 572 communions, and 458 confirmations were solemnized. These parts were evangelized in the seventeenth century by the Jesuit missionaries, and since 1836 the Oblat Fathers have, however, attended to them. Mgr. Lorrain is the first bishop who has ever visited them, and doubtless will have had some most interesting experiences.

MARRIED HIS FIRST LOVE.

A Romance Begun in War Times Ended Many Years After.

A Gainesville, Ga., despatch says:—Mr. John S. Ware and bride arrived on Saturday from Kingston, N. C. The marriage of this couple marks the end of a romantic courtship which was cut of 22 years ago. When Sherman's army captured Atlanta there were several small bodies of Confederates isolated from their commands. The officers gave their men furloughs until such time as they could get together again. Among those thus cut off was John S. Ware of this place, now a leading merchant. Mr. Ware went to Richmond, Onslow County, N. C., where he had friends, and there met and became enamored of Miss Barbara Brock, a beautiful young lady. She refused to marry him then, but declared that if he would rejoin the confederate army, she would become his wife at the close of the war.

Ware did so, but fate sent him back to Georgia instead of to North Carolina and he forgot his first love. He married a young lady of this place, who died about six months ago. The paper containing her death notice fell into the hands of a lady in Atlanta who knew of the North Carolina romance. She mailed it at once to Mrs Barbara Koonce, of Kingston, the Miss Brock of other days, whose husband had recently died. Mrs. Koonce wrote a letter of condolence to her old time lover, and the result was the renewal of their engagement and their marriage a few days ago in Kingston by the Rev. Mr. Jurney of the Methodist church. Each party had a family of three—two boys and one girl—all of whom are now under the roof tree of Mr Ware, in this city, to-night.

COBOURG.

DEATH AMONG THE DURHAMS.—Some mysterious trouble is making havoc among the thoroughdred Durham cattle in some parts of Darlington Township, County of Durham. No fewer than ten bulls have died within the last few weeks.

OVER A CLIFF.—The Oshawa Presbyterian Sunday school pic-nicked on the lake shore last Friday afternoon. While there a little boy was wheeling his baby brother near the edge of a cliff, twenty feet high, when, going too close to the edge, carriage and baby went over into the water below. The alarm was quickly given and a panic occurred amongst the children. The father of the child in a few moments appeared on the scene, slid down the face of the cliff, rescued the little one from its perilous position and restored it to the arms of its mother amidst general rejoicing.—World.

The Seized Poachers.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 30.—The effort of correspondents of American papers to work themselves into fury over the recent seizures of American vessels has failed to be successful. The facts are that two seine boats and fourteen men caught in the very act of stealing fish, as they themselves admit under oath, within two miles of shore, were seized. The collector of customs refused to permit these thieves to ship home in fishing vessels, which would have been another violation of the law. The Hodgson was hovering around Shelburne harbor trying to steal bait. She did not report at customs as she should have done, and was, therefore, fined. That is all there is to it.

Manitoba Crops.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 30.—On Thursday morning General Superintendent White, accompained by Mr. A. M. Burgess, deputy minister of interrior, Mr. H. H. Smith, Dominion land commissioner, and Mr. J. H. McTavis, C.P.R. land commissioner, left on a trip over the Southwestern railway. They found all along the line the most promising prospects for a successful harvest, and the settlers are all jubilant. The party returned to the city yesterday afternoon.

Advice to Consumptives.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs; therefore use the great anti-scrofula or blood purifier and strength-restorer—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Superior to cod-liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. For Dr. Pierce's treatise on consumption, send ten cents in stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

LATEST CABLE NEWS.

LORD CHARLES BERESFORD.

LONDON, July 30.—The Queen's refusal to accept the resignation of Lord Charles Beresford, has caused intense satisfaction to the Pall Mall Gazette, which cannot refrain from expressing its belief that Her Majesty should recognize the changed state of public opinion regarding the rigid observance of absolute forms by condoning an error which a few years ago would have been regarded as a heinous crime. That the Queen's refusal to assume, by accepting Lord Charles Beresford's resignation, that that officer had committed an unpardonable breach of etiquette in communicating with his wife while constructively in the presence of the Sovereign, will largely increase the esteem in which she is held by her subjects.

GLADSTONE IN GOOD CHEER.

LONDON, July 30.—Mr. Gladstone addressed the London Liberal-Radical union last evening. He said that at the last election the Unionists had a majority of 176,000 in the whole country, and that if the Liberals reclaimed 150,600 votes, their strength in parliament, now in the minority, would become a majority of a hundred. Continuing he said that 150,000 votes represented 11 per cent of the whole electorate, and that the recent elections had already given the Liberals six or seven seats—gains which indicated that the Liberals would triumph if parliament were dissolved to-morrow. In regard to the Unionist members he was sure that electors who supported or refrained from opposing them at the last election mistook the position. They believed the Irish autonomy to be of questionable policy or even mischievous, but anyhow they expected that the Unionists would co-operate with the remainder of the party in regard to Liberal principles, especially against coercion.

THE ITALIAN CRISIS.

LONDON, July 30.—A Roman despatch says that Signor Crispi will form a new cabinet.

PACIFIC MAIL SUBSIDY.

LONDON, July 30.—Two hundred members of the House of Commons have signed a memoral urging the government to grant the proposed Pacific mail subsidy. The imperial federation league is also urging the government to adopt the Canadian proposal.

HOLY TRINITY'S NEW RECTOR.

LONDON, July 30.—The Pall Mall Gazette has no doubt the Rev. Walpole Warren, Vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Lambeth, has formally accepted the rectorship of Holy Trinity Church, New York, and will sail for that city on Sept. 14th.

FOREIGNERS IN RUSSIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 30.—A commission has been appointed to enquire into the rights of foreign companies owning land or works in Russia. The attention of the commission will be specially directed to companies owning factories in the Western provinces. It is expected that the commission acting in pursuance of the ukase of March 26, will recommend that factories be closed or transferred to Russian subjects.

TO STUDY HOME RULE.

LONDON, July 30.—Caine, the Liberal-Unionists M.P. for Barrow-in-Furness, starts next week, taking the Canadian Pacific route to Asia. He intends while in Canada to enquire into possible evils arising in on account of Home Rule and to use whatever information he may thus obtain against the Irish movement.

A GAIN OF VOTES.

LONDON, July 30.—Mr. Samuelson (Liberal) has been elected to the Commons for the Forest-dean division of Gloucestershire by a largely increased vote. This election shows the Liberal-Unionists are returning to their allegiance.

BOULANGER AND FERRY.

PARIS, July 30.—Gen. Boulanger's seconds had an interview with M. Ferry to-day. He referred them to two friends. Some of Ferry's friends are urging him to fight.

Mrs. Langtry.

OMAHA, Neb., July 30.—Mrs Lily Langtry, who passed eastward through here yesterday, was interviewed as to her declaration in San Francisco to become a citizen of the United States. She said: "I see that one of the judges of the Supreme Court is quoted as saying that the fact of my affidavit being taken at my own house vitiates the legality of the proceedings. If there was any wrong in the proceedings it was the fault or rather through the kindness of the officials at San Francisco, who themselves volunteered to send a notary to my house. My advocate assures me that the proceedings were regular, and I need have no fear of their legality. My object in desiring to become a citizen is because I prefer the Government and institutions of the United States. I won my first laurels here, I have invested largely in property here, and my agent, Mr. Keough, intends to become an American citizen."

A Bank's Checks Thrown Out.

NEW YORK, July 30.—A Philadelphia despatch says the checks of the Columbian Bank, 433 Chestnut street, were thrown ou yesterday by the Farmers and Mechanics National Bank, because of a lack of funds. President Phillips, of the Columbian Bank, was in New York yesterday. When he returned he said the non payment of the drafts was owing to "a blunder," and that the matter had been adjusted and the draft set off against the firm's account with the Bank.

The B. & O. Deal.

BALTIMORE, Md., July 30.—Hambleton & Co., Mr. Garret's confidential bankers, issue a semi-official statement of the late B. & O. deal, in which they say that there was never any possibility of Mr. Garret's parting with the telegraph property to Mr. Gould. This story of a combination of telegrapher to purchase the property is also denied. Mr. Garret is described as having the best of the Wall street financiers, as he holds $1,800,000 of Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton stock, and $300,000 in cash.

Holocaust of Cows.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, July 30.—Yesterday afternoon a fire on Gest street, near Harriet, destroyed twenty five old buildings and cow stables. Fifty cows were burned alive. Several firemen were prostrated with the heat, Capt. Batchelor and John Q. Adams dangerously. Total loss $100,000.

CANOEING.

THE value of sports and exercises in the open air, as conducing not only to bodily health and strength, but also to concomitant health and vigor of mind, is now not only theoretically acknowledged, but is also very generally recognized practically. In this district, with its abounding waters, its network of rivers and lakes, it is very natural that such sports should take an aquatic form. Peterborough is indeed the very headquarters of the manufacture and use of the variety of canoe moulded after the "birch-bark" of the aboriginal red men. Here the construction of these graceful and useful craft is carried to a high pitch of perfection, and this is still the prevailing pattern, though from the canoeists of the United States we have also learnt to adopt wholly or partially the form that has been developed from the covered craft of the Eskimo, better adapted for the sail than the paddle.

The superiority of the Peterborough canoe and the prevalence of canoeing among our people naturally led to the choice of our water for the first Canadian camp of the international American Association. The success of the meet in 1883 is not forgotten by those who enjoyed it, and this, with the advantages we have already mentioned, no doubt influenced the selection of Stoney Lake for the first annual meeting of the Norther Division of the A. C. A., now that the rapidly growing popularity of the Association has compelled a subdivision, as it had grown too large to meet in a single camp.

The meeting at Stoney Lake has now opened and gives every promise of a success as marked as that of four years ago. Now, as then, the canoeists of Peterborough will give a hearty welcome to their brethern from other parts of Canada and the United States.

ILLEGAL FISHING.

THE recent seisure of boats and nets at East Point, P. E. I., opens a question of even greater importance than the prevention of poaching within our territory by foreigners. The fishing was not only being conducted within the three mile limit, but the time was Sunday, when our laws prohibit fishing. This is not the first case to show that the New England fishermen, whether poaching in our waters, or using a right to fish accorded them, decline to be bound by the laws of our country, which should be equally binding upon foreigners when they choose to visit us. It is obvious that they thus obtain a very unfair advantage over our law-abiding Canadian fishermen. But there is another reason which makes this matter of vital importance. It is probable that as soon as the New England fishermen are quite convinced that attempts to steal fish are not profitable, the United States authorities will come to a fair agreement with Canada for the use of our fisheries. When any such arrangement is being framed, the utmost care should be taken that it should include stringent regulations for the joint preservation of the fisheries that are to be jointly used. By their own reckless improvidence and disregard of any restrictions as to the time or manner of fishing, the New England fishermen have destroyed their own fisheries. This is what makes them so eager to be allowed free access to our waters, that they may work the same devastation in pursuit of a transient advantage. On both coasts any agreement between the two countries, should provide for the preservation of the fisheries.

REVIEWS.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE. The August number of Harper opens with a very interesting and suggestive description of Miss Welch of "The neighbourhood of the International Park" at Niagara. Dr. Hurst in his account of "A Native Publishing House in India," gives information that will be new to most readers, and shows how strongly the spread of Christianity is opposed. Howard Pyle in his first paper on the "Buccaneers and Narooners of the Spanish Main" gives a thrilling account of the wild exploits of those daring adventurers. The description by G. O. Shields of "Hunting the Grizzly Bear," will offer a strong attraction for those sportsmen who aim at "big game." Dr. Lansdell's account of the "Natives of Siberia" portrays races whose country is now attracting much attention. Miss Davis again takes us "Here and There in the South," making us further acquainted with the surprising development of the Southern States. R. C. Leslie's "Sea Wings," while interesting to the general reader, will have a special interest for the members of the A. C. A. now assembled here, who may gather hints from the sixty-six drawings of various rigs. The leaders of "The Irish Party" are briefly but in a lively manner portrayed by E. Browne. "Ravinna and its Mosaics" is the theme of Sidney Lawrence, and the attractive "Mexican Notes" are continued by C. D. Warner. The two serial novels "Narka" by Miss O'Meara, and "April Hopes" by W. D. Howells, progress with increasing interest in their widely different styles, and H. Phillips contributes a lively short tale "A Fisherman's Mate." This number is unusually rich in poetry. The illustrations are profuse, and of the excellence we have been taught to expect in Harper. The editorial miscellanies deal freely with many questions of the day.

MR. SHAW, Secretary of the Central Farmers Institute, in a letter replying to Mr. Nicholls, declines to quote figures, claiming that he has a right to select his own method in his advocacy of Commercial Union. By availing himself of this right, however, and by refusing to quote prices in the two countries, Mr. Shaw tacitly confesses that he dares not give the figures which show that the prices for the whole produce of an Ontario farm would bring to the farmer a larger amount in Canada than in the United States.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE MEETINGS.

Judging from appearances the inference is plain that an organized scheme is being made to stifle free discussion at the so called farmers meetings engineered by the Central Farmers' Institute. In the first place the meetings have certainly not been representative, and the attendance at each has comprised but a miscroscopial percentage of the resident farmers in the counties in which such meetings have been held. This may be accounted for by the supposition that the large majority of the farmers are loyal to Canada and her institutions, and refuse by their presence to give countenance to what is looked upon as an unhealthy agitation and one certainly calculated to prejudicate the the diplomatic efforts of our Government to arrange such a modus vivendi with our neighbours as will not discriminate against Canadian interests.

The methods employed by the accomplices of Mr. Erastus Wiman are various. After drumming up every possible sympathiser they call a meeting, and if, as has happened in most cases, a very small number are present in response to their urgent appeals, they put a resolution which is declared to be carried unanimously, and which, by the aid of the telegraph system controlled by Mr. Wiman, is wired to every part of the country, and when appearing in the columns of pro American journals, is surmounted by prominent head-lines announcing that the "farmers of the county" have pronounced in favor of Commercial Union. If, however, there should be any present at a meeting who are opposed both to the policy and the tactics sought to be endorsed, the agitator's method is to, if possible, occupy the whole time of the meeting, or in the event of a loyalist getting the floor, to subject him to constant interruptions and insult. A few instances will suffice. About two weeks ago a meeting of the Wentwork Farmers' Institute was held in the city of Hamilton. Although Mr. Valancey Fuller, the president and chief organizer, lives in the county there were but twenty-five persons entitled to vote, (nineteen for and six against), and this number was only secured by enrolling several new members during the progress of the meeting. Mr. Fuller and Mr. Shaw each spoke twice, occupying nearly the whole sitting, but when a farmer present rose to oppose their contentions he was deliberately affronted by being told that he was drunk, and the President took no notice of the insult. Mr. E. D. Smith, of Winona, also attempted to make himself heard on behalf of Canadian interests, and casually remarked that he wished some one better posted than himself were present to discuss his side of the question, whereat Mr. Shaw interjected the insulting comment "So do I" which was followed by (laughter and applause).

Mr. Shaw is the secretary of the Central Farmers' Institute and is therefore supposed to be an impartial officer, but his conduct warrants a widely different supposition.

Another meeting was recently held at Picton, and the Gazette of that town informs us that the speakers against Commercial Union were so interrupted and insulted that their friends left the hall, and "that there was an organized arrangement by those favoring Commercial Union to either prevent a full and fair hearing or to nullify the effect by a fusillade of interruptions."

If the promoters of veiled annexation are of the opinion that public sentiment can be won over to their cause by such disreputable tactics they will find themselves seriously astray in their estimate of the common sense of the people, who in Canada are a reading and thinking people. Any cause which cannot bear the light has little chance of vigorous or enduring growth.—Canadian Manufacturer.

To be Tried for Murder.

WELLAND, July 29.—At the instance of the Crown, Peter Neetle, liberated by a coroner's jury at Fort Erie yesterday, will be brought before Police Magistrate Hill at Niagara Falls and given a hearing on a charge of murder. If sufficient evidence be obtained, Crown Attorney Raymond will ask that Neetle be committed for trial at the October Assizes.

Denial.

MONTREAL, July 29.—Mr. Wainright, Assistant Manager of the G. T. R., denies the statement that the company are seeking privileges from the British Columbian Government with a view to open up a fresh line through the Yellowstone Park, which should finally connect with the proposed new line in Manitoba.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It will do you good. Sold by all Druggists. 50.

THE CROPS IN ONTARIO.

The Yield of Cereals Likely to be Below the Average.

TORONTO, July 29.—The crop reports are by no means so favourable as they were in the early part of the season. The long continued drought has done a great deal of damage, and the yield of cereals in this province will be below the average. Barley has done well. The autumn wheat suffered from winter killing in many districts, and the drought has affected both autumn and spring wheat so seriously that the the crop on the whole will be a light one. The counties bordering on the Georgian Bay and Lake Huron have had the benefit of a greater rainfall than the rest of the province, and crops of all kinds are therefore in a better condition there. The same may be said of Victoria and Peterborough. The drought has been most severe in the Lake Erie counties and in the eastern part of the province. Hay was a good crop, and was well saved. Peas have failed, and the root crops will be meagre. On the whole, the farmers in this province are likely to have a lean year.

A Rascally Incendiary.

LEXINGTON, Ky., July 29.—D. D. Bell, an eighteen-year-old colored boy, confesses that he set fire to a number of buildings recently burned in this city. He says he knows he cannot be punished for it by law on account of his age, and plays the incendiary for his own amusement. He is in custody and the authorities are afraid to turn him loose.

A Novel Experiment.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 29.—The directors of the exposition are considering the advisability of requesting ex-Premier Gladstone to open the exposition this year by pressing an electric button in London, as Mrs Cleveland did in Washington last year. Both of the cable companies are now investigating the feasibility of the scheme.

A "REFORM" CANDIDATE.

Some people are under an impression that because Mr. Duncan McIntyre is no longer a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company he may be regarded as innocent of the monopolistic taint. To such people we commend a brief editorial in this morning's Herald, which in three lines gives away the whole situation:—"If South Renfrew wants railways who is so able to exert influence in the proper quarter as Duncan McIntyre?" That is it. Mr. McIntyre, with bland professions of 'Liberalism, would go to the House of Commons as a leading representative of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, against whose gorgings at the public expense the Liberal party seems to have exhausted itself in protesting.—Montreal Witness (Reform.)

A GOOD MARKET.

Commenting upon the high retail prices of beef, the Kansas Times points out how extremely cheap cattle are in the States. In Chicago the wholesale price per pound, live weight, is extremely low. This in a country where Wiman would have Canadians seek a better market for their cattle, without regard to Liverpool prices!—Toronto World.

OVER WORKED Women

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD.

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc

"Leave them alone and put down those guns," he shouted. "It served Jacobus right; he was trying to push the girl from the horse. Almighty! it is not wonderful those English call us brute beasts when you boys do such things. Put down your guns, I say, and one of you help Jacobus up. He looks as sick as a buck with a bullet through it."

Accordingly the row passed over, and the playful Jacobus—whom Jess noted with satisfaction was exceedingly sick and trembling in every limb—was with difficulty hoisted on to his horse, and proceeded on his journey with not a single bit of fun left in him.

A little while after this Jess pointed out a long, low hill that lay upon the flat belt, a dozen miles or so away, like a stone on a stretch of sand.

"Look," she said; "there is Mooifontein at last!"

"We are not there yet," remarked John, sadly.

Another weary half hour passed, and then they suddenly, on passing over a crest, saw Hans Coetzee's homestead lying down by the water in the hollow. So that was where they were being taken to.

Within a hundred yards of the house the Boers halted and consulted, except Jacobus, who went on, still looking very green. Finally the elder man came to them and addressed Jess, at the same time handing her back the pass. "You can go on home," he said. "The Englishman must stay with us till we find out more about him."

"He says that I can go. What shall I do?" asked Jess. "I don't like leaving you with these men."

"Do? why go, of course. I can look after myself; and if I can't, certainly you won't be able to help me. Perhaps you will be able to get some help at the farm. At any rate, you must go,"

"Now, Englishman," said the Boer.

"Good by, Jess," said John. "God bless you."

"Good by, John," she answered, looking him steadily in the eyes for a moment, and then turning away to hide the tears which would gather in her own.

And thus they parted.

She knew her way now, even across the open veldt, for she dared not go by the road. There was, however, a bridle path that ran over the hill at the back of the house, and for this she shaped her course. It was 5 o'clock now, and both she and her horse were in a condition of great exhaustion, which was enhanced in her case by want of food and trouble of mind. But she was a strong woman and had a will of iron, and she held on where most women would have died. Jess meant to get to Mooifontein somehow, and she knew that she would get there. If she could only reach the place and get some help sent to her lover, she did not greatly care what happened to her afterward. The pace of the horse she was riding got slower and slower. From the ambling canter into which at first she managed occasionally to force it, and which is the best pace to travel in South Africa, it continually collapsed into a rough, short trot, which was agony to her, riding as she was, and from that into a walk. Indeed, just before sunset, or a little after 6 o'clock, the walk became final. At last they reached the rising ground that stretched up the slope to the Mooifontein hill, and here the poor beast fell down, utterly worn out. Jess slipped off and tried to drag it up, but failed. It had not a yard of go left in it. So she did what she could, pulling off the bridle and undoing the girth, so that the saddle would fall off if the horse ever managed to rise. Then she set to work to walk over the hill. The poor horse watched her go with melancholy eyes, knowing that it was being deserted. First it neighed, then, with a desperate effort, struggled to its feet and ran after her a hundred yards or so, only to fall down again at last. Jess turned and saw it, and, exhausted as she was, she positively ran to get away from the look in those big eyes. That night there was a cold rain, in which the horse perished, as "poor" horses are apt to do.

It was nearly dark when Jess at length reached the top of the hill and looked down. She knew the spot well, and from it she could always see the light from the kitchen window of the house. To-night there was no light. Wondering what it could mean, and feeling a fresh chill of doubt creep round her heart, she scrambled on down the hill. When she was about half way down a shower of sparks suddenly shot up into the air from the spot where the house should be, caused by the fall of a piece of wall into the smouldering embers beneath. Again Jess paused, wondering and aghast. What could have happened? Determined at all hazards to discover, she crept on very cautiously. Before she had gone another twenty yards, however, a hand was suddenly laid upon her arm. She turned quickly, too paralyzed with fear to cry out, and as she did so a voice that was familiar to her whispered: "Missie Jess, Missie Jess, is it you?" into her ear. "I am Jantje."

She gave a sigh of relief, and her heart, which had stood still, began to move again. Here was a friend at last.

"I heard you coming down the hill, though you came so softly," he said; "but I could not tell who it was, because you jumped from rock to rock, and did not walk as usual. But I thought it was a woman with boots; I could not see, because the light all falls dead against the hill, and the stars are not up. So I got to the left of your path—for the wind is blowing from the right—and waited till you had passed, and winded you. Then I knew who you were for certain—either you or Missie Bessie; but Missie Bessie is shut up, so it could not be her."

"Bessie shut up!" ejaculated Jess, not even pausing to marvel at the doglike instinct that enabled the Hottentot to identify her. "What do you mean?"

"This way, missie; come this way and I will tell you;" and he led her to a fantastic pile of rocks in which it was his wild habit to sleep. Jess knew the place well, and had often peeped into, but never entered, the Hottentot's kennel.

"Stop a bit, missie. I will go and light a candle; I have some in there, and they can't see the light from the outside," and accordingly he vanished. In a few seconds he returned, and, taking her by the sleeve, led her along a winding passage between great bowlders, till they came to a beehole in the rocks, through which she could see the light shining. Going down on his hands and knees Jantje crept through and Jess followed him. She found herself in a small apartment about six feet square by eight high, principally formed by the accidental falling together of several big bowlders and roofed in by one great natural slab. Discarding a three legged stool that Jantje offered her Jess sank down upon a pile of skins in the corner.

"Stop before you begin," she said. "Have you anything to eat here? I am nearly starving."

Jantje grinned knowingly, and, grubbing in a heap of rubbish in the corner, fished out a gourd with a piece of flat sheet iron which had once formed the back plate of a stove, placed on the top. It contained "maas," or curdled buttermilk, which a woman had brought him down that very morning from a neighboring kraal, and was destined for Jantje's own supper. Hungry as he was himself, for he had had no food all day, he gave it to Jess without a moment's hesitation, together with a wooden spoon, and, squatting on the rock before her, watched her eat it with guttural exclamations of satisfaction. Not knowing that she was robbing a hungry man, Jess ate the maas to the last spoonful, and was grateful to feel the sensation of gnawing sickness leave her.

Consumption Can be Cured

By proper, healthful exercise, and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, which contains the healing and strengthening virtues of these two valuable specifics in their fullest form. Dr. D. D. McDonald, Petitcodiac, N.B., says: "I have been prescribing Scott's Emulsion with good results. It is especially useful in persons with consumptive tendencies." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

WHAT IT ALL MEANS.

The significance of the Commercial Union movement is revealed the moment an intelligent Canadian opens his mouth on the subject. It means annexation—or since that word may have a disagreeable sound, North American union. They concede that fact at once. And, indeed, it is impossible for an intelligent mind to imagine the possibility of preventing political union once commercial union is established. With the border custom houses abolished, and with a mutual arrangement for the equitable division of the seaport duties, the two peoples would be practically one, and the maintenance of two costly federal governments would become at once so obviously absurd that few years would pass before one of them was abolished, and it wouldn't make a particle of difference which, so long as the remaining one had no connection with Great Britain.—Detroit News.

NORTH-WEST PROGRESS.

One of the very best auguries of the future greatness of agriculture in Alberta is found in the large quantity of land that is broken this year for the purpose of seeding next season. All the way between Calgary and High River, a distance of nearly 40 miles, the traveller is hardly ever out of sight of the plowman, busily engaged turning up the rich black soil everywhere to be found. The whole prairie is dotted over with stretches of ploughed land, and it is apparent that the acreage next year will be three or four times greater than that from which crops will be taken this year. All this shows the implicit faith of our farmers in the productiveness of the soil. The successful experiments of the past four years have given the farmers the most thorough reliance on results, and that so much breaking is going on shows this as nothing else could do.—Calgary Tribune.

It is proposed to establish a botanic garden in connection with the Central Experimental Farm near Ottawa.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

INTO A CORNER.

An eastern contemporary calls attention to the inconsistency of the Local Government in the matter of its appointments. It says: "When Registrar Waller, of Carleton, died and the Government declined to appoint his son to succeed him, one of the reasons advanced for refusing to accede to the popular wish that way was that such appointments should not run in families. Now the Government has appointed the son of the late Sheriff Paxton, of Ontario County, to the position left vacant by his father's death." Its practice has thus very effectually destroyed its professions. The fact appears that in so far as the Carleton registrarship was concerned the government got itself in a corner. The culmination of its embarrassment it delayed until the eleventh hour knowing that it was sure to create party soreness. The result would not be so serious were it not apparent that the excuse for following a certain course was not genuine. The son of a father has certainly as much right to consideration in Carleton as in Ontario county.—Kingston Whig (Reform.)

MONDAY, AUGUST 1, 1887.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Board of Education.

A regular meeting of the Board of Education is called for to-morrow evening

At the Lake.

A crowd went up from town yesterday to Stoney Lake. During the afternoon some of the boys indulged in unpremeditated bathing. They were hauled up by some of the rest.

After His Scalp.

Councillor McNaughton is in a resentful mood on account of the way the Mayor used him at the last Council meeting. He did not at all like the threat his Worship made to have him removed from the chamber. He says that he is going now to keep the Mayor's nose to the grindstone from this out. He has been reading up the rules, he says, and he'll see that the Mayor keeps order if everyone else has to.

Recreation Day.

The best excursion of the season will be run on Thursday, August 4th, by the Peterborough Fire Brigade to Grimsby Park. As the above day will be "Recreation Day" at the Park a programme has been prepared consisting of games at lawn tennis and croquet, ladies' and gentlemen's rowing matches, and a pyrotechnical display in the evening. Tickets for the round trip $1.75, good for two days. d22

Cool Down.

The printers of Cobourg and Port Hope played a game of baseball at the latter town on Friday, and the Cobourg typos won by 13 to 9. The Port Hope Times devotes over a column to the game, embellishing the account with cuts of whipped roosters and tombstones, and the Cobourg World heads its report with a rooster that fills nearly a column of the paper. Verily, vanity and hot weather have a great effect on some people.

The Central Park.

It is quite probable that the Central Park will be fully deserving of the name before long. The work of beautifying it is now being carried forward in accordance with the plan prepared by Mr. T. A. Hay. There will be a ten foot walk back from the fountain. Six five foot walks will converge to a circular centre similar to those in the Gardens. A piece of ground north of the drill shed is to be reserved for a parade ground, and this will be separated from the park by a ten foot walk leading from McDonnel street to Murray street. The drill shed will be replaced by a brick armoury.

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

Nicholls Hospital.

The Lady Superintendent thankfully acknowledges the following donations to the hospital for July:—Mrs. J. E. Dennistoun, fruit and cakes; Mrs. Morrow, milk; Miss Shortly, flowers; Miss L. Rutherford, flowers; W. C. T. U., flowers and old cotton; a friend, black currant preserves. Number of patients in the hospital for the month ending July, 1887, 6. Diseases—spinal disease, 1; abscess and synovitis, 2; anasarca, 1; cancer, 1; general debility, 1. Discharged cured, 5; incurable, 1; improved, 1. Total number treated during month, 14; from Peterborough, 12; from the county, 2. Pay patients, 3; non-paying, 6. Dr. Pigeon attending physician for July.

Destructive Hens.

Mr. S. Blade on returning on Saturday night to the Gardens from the Central Park, where he was superintending the construction of the walks, found that a fine "carpet" bed had been nearly destroyed. While he was away the hens kept by the people on Brock street, opposite the Gardens, had got into it and broken down the foliage plants in one corner completely. Mr. Blade has been very attentive to his work during this summer and took such a pride in it that for thirty-three nights he stayed in the Gardens to see that no vagrant cow or horse got in and destroyed the flower beds. It was annoying to him on Saturday to find that one of his pet corners had been disfigured in his absence. If Mr. Blade is to superintend the laying out of the Central Park some one should be got to watch the Gardens in his absence.

Medals.

Six handsome gold and silver medals are on exhibition in the window at Habiliment Hall. They will be given as prizes for foot races and bicycle races during the Oddfellows demonstration.

A Rail Excursion.

The Grand Trunk Railway will run an all rail excursion to Grimsby Park via Toronto and Hamilton on August 4th, at the low rate of $1.75; children half fare. Tickets good for two days. 1d26

Won't Come Off.

The Peterborough baseball nine intended to go to Cobourg on Friday, but on account of the most of them having made arrangements to go on the Firemen's excursion to Grimsby on that day the game will not be played.

At the Rink.

The committee in charge of transforming the Charlotte street skating rink into suitable headquarters for the visiting Cantons commenced work this morning. Mr. Watson and the decoration committee are also busily going ahead with the business of the decoration department.

Promenade Concerts.

Remember the Promenade Concert to be given by the Victoria Rifles Band of Montreal, on the P.A.A.A. grounds on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, 9th and 10th of August. Secure your tickets early. To be had at the Book Stores, Members of Committee and at the Gate. Tickets twenty-five cents.

Meeting of Ladies.

The Oddfellows have been received by the ladies of the town in a very kind manner. Though only half of the ground has been gone over the amount of refreshments promised is up to their expectations. It has been decided to call a meeting this week of the ladies who intend assisting in the skating rink dining room so that confusion on the day the Oddfellows arrive may be avoided.

Personal.

Mr. S. Hunter, the well known cartoonist, is in town.

Mr. J. E. Hawkins, of Montreal, is in town.

Mr. J. Fairweather has returned from his holiday trip in the west.

Mr. A. J. Hoover and Mrs. Hoover have gone west on a three weeks holiday trip.

Mr. E. B. Edwards has returned home from England, where he has been for the last two months attending the county business.

Branching Out.

The Golden Lion dry goods house will be largely altered and improved during the next few weeks. The principal change will be the removal of the millinery department from the second flat to the first flat. In order to do this the lower part of the first flat is to be widened by several feet. The staircase will be made the width of the showroom, and the whole of the second flat will be devoted to the carpet and oilcloth department. When these changes are made the Golden Lion will be in a better position than ever to show off the magnificent stock which is carried.

Funeral.

On Sunday afternoon at four o'clock a Salvation Army funeral marched down George street, there being about a hundred and twenty-five in the procession. The body of the deceased brother, Mr. W. H. Mitchell, encased in a handsome coffin, was borne on the shoulders of four Salvationists from the family residence, Ashburnham, to the bridge at Spaulding's Bay, a distance of a mile and a half. Here the coffin was placed in a hearse and the procession went on to the Little Lake Cemetery. At the grave the Salvation Army service was conducted by Capt. Eaton, of Lindsay. In the evening the Army held a large parade, which was led by the Lindsay Brass Band.

A PAIR of Ladies' Button Boots and a Bottle of Good Polish for 80 cts. at KIDD'S

Baseball.

A baseball match was played in the P. A. A. grounds on Saturday afternoon between nines representing Campbellford and Peterborough. The Campbellford team were composed of:—Moran, catcher; McCown, pitcher; Bonnycastle, 2nd base; Cumming, 1st base; Platt, 3rd base; Archer, centre field; Atkinson, right field; Graham, short stop; and Beattie, left field. The Peterboroughs were represented by:—Landy, catcher; Galley, pitcher, Metheral, 1st base; Brennan, centre field; Callaghan, 3rd base; Bunting, left field; Kincaid, short stop; Fligg, 2nd base; and Craig, right field. The game was stopped by rain at the end of the fourth innings, the score standing 4-8 in favor of Peterborough. The Campbellford team played well at times, but having some who were unused to the game made weak points which were easily broken through. In the last innings the visitors whitewashed the home nine with sharp play The score by innings was as follows:—

Campbellford—1 0 3 0.

Peterborough—1 6 1 0.

THE FIREMEN'S EXCURSION TO GRIMSBY.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—Kindly permit me through the columns of your valuable paper to give publicity to what appears to me a "small" action on the part of the Grand Trunk railway. A short time ago, the Fire Brigade issued bills announcing their annual excursion to Grimsby via C. P. R. to Toronto then by steamer to Grimsby. The tickets were placed at $1.50 to Toronto and $1.75 to Grimsby. This announcement caught the eye of an over zealous official of the G. T. R. and he reported the same to his superiors. The outcome of his interference in effect was, that new arrangements had to be entered into, the combination sustained and the public taxed 25 cents more for their tickets. The members of the brigade submitted to the change with good grace, had new bills and tickets printed, believing that they had satisfied the objection offered and that they would be allowed to conduct the excursion without further opposition or interference.

But, alas! for them was not to be!

Of those hopes they were deprived, by reading a poster issued by the Grand Trunk Railway this morning announcing an opposition excursion on the same date, to the same points, at the same prices. Now, Mr. Editor, I do take exception to any road, showing such vindictive opposition to an organization like the Peterborough Fire Brigade, an organization banded together for the protection of our property from the ravages of fire, risking at many times life and limb, ready at all times to respond to the call of duty, voluntarily ready at all times to respond to an alarm of fire, should it be the Grand Trunk Railway property. Why such miserable opposition to the best public local organization we possess?

To say that the action is mean, and the zealous official who prompted the action is "one of the meanest," is certainly speaking within the mark. It is to be hoped the public will look at the matter in the proper light, and show by their absence that they cannot endorse a mean act, though it be the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

Thanking you for the space,

I remain yours,

A FIREMAN'S FRIEND.

IRON MINES.—We learn that negotiations are in progress for the immediate working of the iron mines in this district, a syndicate of Chicago capitalists having taken charge of some of the mines.

LOSES HIS RIGHT ARM.—A serious accident occurred in Sylvester Bros.' Works, Oshawa, on Tuesday morning last a few minutes after 7 o'clock. A workman was in the second story placing a belt when he let it slip. Below it was being held by a young man a painter names Frank Jaynes, son of W. H. Jaynes, Esq., of Oshawa, who attempted to prevent the belt's winding around the shaft. But instantly his arm became entangled, and in less time than it takes to read this, Frank Jaynes was whirled four or five times around the shaft, each time passing through a space eighteen inches wide between the shaft and the floor above, skillfully evading striking his head by pressing it close to the shaft, but his boots were knocked off his feet. His right arm was terribly mangled, the bones from wrist to elbow, protruding through the flesh in four or five places. The muscles also were terribly torn. The arm was amputated at the elbow joint. The unfortunate young man now lies at Mrs. Gall's in a comfortable airy room, and is waited on by his sister and father from Oshawa, assisted by Miss Gall and his fellow True Blues. The wounded man bears his suffering without a murmur, and proves a regular hero. Thus far he is progressing well.—Warder.

LIBERAL WEATHERCOCKS.

In the absence of any leader who effectively controls the Liberal party, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's clique of the party seems to have seized the reins. Their candidate, in the shape of a former member of the Syndicate, has received the party nomination for South Renfrew, which constituency has been opened by the death of its late member. Both Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Laurier, the latter the recognized leader of the Liberal party, have strongly commended the nomination. It may therefore be take for granted that hereafter the Liberal party, excepting, we suppose, in Manitoba, is to bow in submission to the demands of the real rulers of Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as the Conservative Government has always done. Under these circumstances, there are many Liberals and Independents who will take little or no interest in the success of the Liberal party.—Montreal Witness (Reform.)

MCGARIGLE IN CANADA.

The Chicago Boodler's Movements Since Reaching Sarnia.

SARNIA, Aug. 1.—At midnight last night the Chief of police received a telegram from State Attorney Grinnell ordering McGarigle's immediate arrest on an indictment got out in Montreal. As the telegram did not state the nature of the charge, Chief Windred hesitated about making the arrest He, however, went at 2 a. m. to the house where McGarigle was supposed to be staying over night, and found upon investigation that he had gone, no person could or would tell where.

He was driven off this morning between 1 and 2 o'clock by John Boyle, the livery stable proprietor, who drove him down to Courtright yesterday and at whose house he remained until leaving early this morning. Boyle states that McGarigle went away to get rid of the Chicago reporters. The Tribune man had an appointment with McGarigle this morning which the latter failed to keep.

Chief of Police Windred stated this morning that he had consulted County Crown Attorney Bucke and that he was advised not to make the arrest without a proper warrant. Mr. Lister, M.P., has been retained by McGarigle as his legal adviser to look after his interests in case of trouble.

TWO ARRESTS AT CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—Dr. St. John, of Chicago, owner of the schooner Blake, and who is believed to have personally assisted McGargle to escape, was arrested this morning. The doctor at once furnished bail for $20,000.

It was subsequently learned that a warrant was out for Dell. He was found at the County Hospital complaining of being sick. A guard was left with Dell until it could be ascertained whether he was in condition to be moved.

THE FUGITIVE GETS TO LONDON.

SARNIA, Aug. 1.—Later advices are to the effect that the conductor of the train leaving here this morning came back at midnight to-night and states that he saw McGargle get on his train at Wyoming, a station about fourteen miles from here, and that he got off at London. His story is corroborated by the brakeman. They recognized him by his picture.

THE AMEERS PROCLAMATION.

British Regiments Ready to March into Afghanistan.

CALCUTTA, August 1.—Advices from Candahar state that the Ameer of Afghanistan has caused a proclamation to be posted in the bazars in that city informing his subjects that the British Government is holding six infantry divisions, each consisting of nine regiments; with cavalry and artillery in readiness to march into Afghanistan to suppress the revolt of the Ameer's enemies in the interior. The proclamation adds: "I can suppress the Ghilzais without them, but may remain ready in case Russia takes advantage of the revolution to invade the country." The Ameer invites the rebels to return to their homes, and say he will only punish the chiefs in the insurrection. He warns Great Britain against permitting Ayoub Khan to approach the frontier. The opponents of the Ameer explain that in issuing the proclamation the Ameer is playing his trump card, as he finds that the people value his alliance with English more than they value the Ameer himself.

The insurgents in Afghanistan have blocked the roads between Candahar and India.

Shot by Indians.

VICTORIA, B.C. Aug 1.—H. M. Fox and D. W. Martin, who are prospecting for quartz on the west coast of Vancouver, were shot at by two Indians while lying in their tent. Martin was struck on the left shoulder by a led sling an inch long, which passed clean through his body. Fox was shot in the abdomen with a large buckshot. With the assistance of a third companion they got into a canoe and paddled to the Indian village of Ohousett, where a band was organized and the murderers searched for and found. The injured men reached Victoria to-night, having been brought in a canoe by Indians. The prisoners were also brought in the canoes. The Indians aided in every way. Both men are seriously wounded, but will probably recover

THE TABLES TURNED.

Rev. Father Paradis Causes the Arrest of Messrs. Allan and John Gilmour.

OTTAWA, August 1.—The arrest of the Rev. Father Paradis, of the Gatineau region, at the instance of Gilmour & Co, lumbermen on a charge of defacing logs cut on their limits, but which the Rev. Father claims belong to his colonization company, has caused a sensation here. This morning the affair took an extraordinary phase by Father Paradis turning the tables and causing the millionaire lumbermen, Allan, Gilmour and John Gilmour, to be arrested on a warrant sworn out by a man named Brouillard, who was arrested at the same time as Father Paradis, charged with cutting logs belonging to the Gilmours. Brouillard's warrant against Gmilour & Co. charges them taking logs not belonging to them. The gentlemen were, of course, released at once on their personal recognizance to appear before the court in Hull. Mr. Gilmour, speaking to a reporter, said that to make such a charge against the firm was outrageous. Their alleged offence had simply been taking possession of what they claimed were their own logs, which were found in possession of a dealer named Adam, of Gatineau Point, who had got them from Father Paradis. These were the logs defaced by him on the ground that they were cut from lots granted to his Colonization Company. Mr. Gilmour said that the dealer Adam, when he found the logs were in dispute, would not touch them, and the firm accordingly took possession of their own. There are rumors, the truth of which is not vouched for, that the affair may assume something of a political cast by the Mercier Government supporting Father Paradis' claim to the timber lots in dispute.

DRIVEN OUT OF THE TRADE.

United States Vessel Owner Withdrawing from the Fishing Business.

CANSO, N.S., Aug. 1.—Captain Hickman, of the schooner Torridon, reports having sustained a very serious loss, not so much in fish stolen off his trawls by Yankee high sea robbers but in their destruction, in sheer wantonness, of his trawl gear. He had bait enough to have secured upwards of three hundred quintals more fish, which he had to throw overboard, not having gear enough left to use it before it spoiled. On previous trips, when he and other Nova Scotia vessels have fallen in with Gloucester vessels on the banks, the Yankees have contented themselves with insults to ease their sore heads. One of the American fishing schooners perpetrating these outrages was the Everett Steel, of Gloucester, already marked for confiscation for violating customs and fishing laws in this port last summer by coming in here without reporting at the customs office and on leaving taking bait from a boat in Canso harbour as she sailed away. In May last, on the western bank a Yankee stole the trawl gear of a Newfoundlander. The Ancient Colonist gathered a force, boarded the schooner and dug his gear out of his salt bin, much to the chagrin of the crew, who had offered to take their oaths that they never saw them. The Everett Forbes seems to be a doomed vessel. She was detained at Shelburne last year for very questionable proceedings on the part of the skipper. Next she inaugurated a new specimen of Yankee ingenuity. Now she is charged with robbery on the high seas. Her skipper, Forbes, is a white-washed Yankee.

HALIFAX, N. S., Aug. 1.—The Canadian fishermen are very much impressed by the statements made by Capt. Boyd, of the American flagship Richmond, now at this port. Regarding the Shelburne seizure, he says he would take Skipper Morrison's statements with the proverbial grain of salt, as the fishermen's love of dollars and cents override every other consideration. At the same time Captain Boyd thinks the Canadian Government shows no intention of extending international courtesies. He believes they will continue this policy, and that it will lead to the extinction of the American fishing fleet. He states that when the Richmond was on the New England coast recently he was informed on the best authority that the owners of fishing craft had already commenced to close up their connection with the business, withdrawing from the trade as gradually as circumstances would permit, and unless a favorable adjustment of the dispute was arrived at, they would soon have no interest whatever in the fisheries. This is exactly what the Canadians claimed all along, viz., that a thorough protection of the fisheries would but preserve them to the use only, but at an early day would drive their rivals out of the business, and not only assure Canada free fish with the United States, but also a monopoly of their great markets. The Canadian position, it is claimed, is maintained out of the mouth of American officials.

Gross Breach of Trust.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Jerome L. Hill, who has been known in Wall street as a dashing speculator, was with William A. Latimer, John Bloodgood of the firm of John Bloodgood & Co., an executor of the estate of William Latimer, with whom he had been for many years a partner in the dry goods business. Latimer left a large estate and something like a million and a half in securities was deposited with the Mercantile Safe Deposit Company, subject to the order of the executors. It was developed last Friday, according to the counsel for the other executors that Hill had been false to his trust and had appropriated some of the securities to his own use. By order of the other executors search of the vault was made and it was found that securities of the face value of $250,000 and of the actual value of nearly $275,000 were missing.

Proposed Trip to England.

TORONTO, August 1.—It is stated that should the four-oared crew of the Toronto Rowing Club, the champions of America, win the four-oared race at the meeting of the Canadian Association of Amateur Oarsmen at Ottawa next Saturday, arrangements will be made to send the crew to England next year, to row in the Henley regatta. A number of admirers of the four have intimated their readiness to contribut $500 towards defraying the expenses of the trip, and it is said the balance required can easily be obtained.

MRS. CLEVELAND ANNOYED

At the Profuse use of Her Photographs for Advertising Purposes.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The common use lately of Mrs. Cleveland's pictures as an advertising card is likely to lead to several lawsuits against the firms putting them out. The original of the pictures common on the market were copyrighted by two Washington photographers shortly after Mrs. Cleveland's marriage. At first the only advantage reaped was from the local sale of the cards. Gradually, however, an outside demand sprung up, and before this could be met orders commenced to pour in from all parts of Europe for them. They have proved to be the most popular selling pictures of the day. To supply the foreign demand, leading houses in London and Paris are now striking off copies of the American originals, without regard to the rights of the Washington artists. The Washington photographers have no remedy for the foreign grievance, but they have one for the infringment in this country. The tobacco houses, cigarette manufacturers and soap dealers who have been making Mrs Cleveland's features common in hideous lithographs and chromos are to be called to a legal account, and the prosecutions will have the moral sanction of the White House where the practice has caused much offense. There is no desire on the part of Mrs. Cleveland to give the Washington dealers a monopoly of her features and she is not averse to copies being made for private sale, use or ornament, even if she should have to give outside artists a special sitting, but she will not give her consent to the use of her pictures for an advertisement.

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

An Old Man Shoots his Wife, Murders a Magistrate, and Commits Suicide.

CAMDEN, N. J., Aug. 1.—A more horrible tragedy never occurred in this city, and probably in the State of New Jersey, than that which occurred in South Camden this evening, when Mr. Willshire, aged 50 years, shot his wife Ella, aged, 47, deliberately murdered a Justice of the peace, William S. Darr (colored), and finished the work of destruction by sending a bullet through his own brain, dying almost instantly. The tragedy occurred on Spruce street, where Squire Darr had his office as justice and real estate agent. Willshire had lived unhappily with his wife for some time. The couple had three children. About two weeks ago Mrs. Willshire, becoming tired of her husband's abuse, went to Squire Darr's office and had a warrant issued charging him with non support and cruelty. He was arrested, tried and ordered to pay six dollars per week for the support of his wife and childrenf Instead of giving his wife the amount ordered he gave her but two dollars. The woman appealed for more but her husband refused to listen, the consequence being that the old family quarrel was renewed. This evening Willshire entered the house, grasped his wife by the throat and commenced choking her. She succeeded in getting away from him and ran to the unfortunate squire. She was telling him her troubles when her husband entered and three minutes later the wife, husband and squire were dead.

Fell from Brooklyn Bridge.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Jas. Martin, painter, 17 years old, who was working on the Brooklyn Bridge to-day, missed his footing on the scaffold and fell into the river. He was picked up by a tug and taken to the hospital. He complained of pain in the side where he struck the water, but apparently was not seriously injured. The distance he fell is about 160 feet. He was kept at the hospital as it was thought he might have suffered internal injuries.

American Visitors.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 1.—Senator Sherman will arrive here this morning, and leave at noon for Montreal, from which point he will start over the Canadian Pacific Railroad for Puget Sound. He will be accompanied by Congressmen Crosvenor and Thompson of Ohio; ex-Congressman Townsend and Gen. J. S Robinson, Secretary of State. It is possible the trip may be extended to Alaska.

The Hull Water Works.

OTTAWA, Aug. 1.—The new system of water works in Hull city, which is now in partial use and nearly completed, was somewhat injured on Saturday by the bursting of one the principal mains when the water was turned on to test it. As much of the drain making had been the blasting of the solid rock, any casualties of the kind will, it is feared, be very expensive.

War upon Americans.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 1. The Tiempo has reopened its attacks upon Americans, although the editor in chief is in prison. It says forty years have not been sufficient to extinguish the absorptionist views of the United States with regard to Mexico and the same greed and hypocritical tendencies still exist.

Collision at Sault Ste. Marie.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich., August 1.—The steam barge Columbia and the schooner Mabel Wilson collided in Sault Ste. Marie canal on Sunday night about ten o'clock. The bulwarks on the port quarter of the Columbia were stove in, and the bobstay guys carried away from the schooner Mabel Wilson. No person was injured.

Advice to Consumptives.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs; therefore use the great anti-scrofula or blood purifier and strength-restorer—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Superior to cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. For Dr. Pierce's treatise on consumption, send ten cents in stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

LATEST CABLE NEWS.

AN AMERICAN-CHINESE BANK.

LONDON, August 1.—The Standard has despatch from Shanghai says the American silver ring and Jay Gould, through the Polish Count Mechinoff and the Viceroy Li, have founded an American-Chinese bank, with a capital of 200,000,000, most all American money. The bank will receive and disburse all the moneys of the Emperor and Provincial Government, and has charge of railway and telegraph contracts coinage, the issue of bank note and the affairs of the war department. The undertaking has created a panic among foreign financiers.

THE ITALIAN CABINET.

ROME, Aug. 1.—The death of Premier Depretis will not affect the political situation. His successor, Signor Crispi, has long been the guiding spirit of the Cabinet. The widow has received an affectionate message of condolence from the German Crown Prince.

AN APOLOGY INSISTED UPON.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Gen. Boulanger has telegraphed to his seconds to insist upon M. Ferry making an immediate apology for his offence to the General in his speech at Epinal, and in the event of a refusal to continue the preparations for a duel.

DEATHS FROM CHOLERA.

CALCUTTA, August 1.—The city of Peshawui, in the Northwestern part of India, in the Paunjaub, is affected with cholera of the worst type. Three hundred deaths from the disease occurred during July.

ALSACE-LORRAINE.

BERLIN, Aug. 1.—Prince Von Hohenlohe arrived at Gastein yesterday, and conferred with the Emperor William upon the condition and measures for Alsace-Lorraine.

THE CROWN PRINCE'S THROAT.

BERLIN, Aug. 1.—Dr. Mackenzie reports that the growth in the Crown Prince's throat is now so slight that he expects the trouble will soon cease altogether. The Prince's voice gains daily in strength, and his general health is excellent.

FIGHTING TO THE SCAFFOLD.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Alfred Sowery, convicted of the murder of his sweet heart, was hanged at Lancaster to-day. He made a desperate resistence, screaming and fighting savagely. He was finally overpowered and carried to the scaffold.

CANADIAN FISHERIES.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—In the House of Commons this afternoon Sir James Fergusson, Foreign Under-Secretary, announed that a correspondence is now progressing which, he hoped, would lead to a satisfactory settlement of the North America fishing dispute at no distant date.

THE HANLAN-BEACH CONTEST.

LONDON, August 1.—The stakes in the Beach-Hanlan contest have been deposited here. Beach forwarded £100 for Hanlan's expenses. The match is set for November 26th.

BERNHART'S BIG RECEIPTS.

LONDON, August 1.—Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's receipts in London averaged over £500 a night.

RUSHING THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Mr. Balfour, replying to a question by Mr. Parnell, intimated that it was probable that the Government would withdraw the clauses of the Land bill which yet awaited action and were of a nature to excite opposition, for the passage of the measure would be thus expedited. Continuing, he said it was unfair for the Opposition to introduce other clauses outside the intention of the bill. Mr. Parnell disclaimed all intention of bringing in extraneous matter, and promised that most of the amendments offered by the Nationalists should be withdrawn.

NO NEWS OF STANLEY.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—A despatch from St. Paul de Loanda, dated July 31, says: M. Janssen, Governor of the Congo Free State, writes from Borna that since receiving the news of the arrival of Stanley at the camp on the Arnwhimi River, no message has arrived from the Upper Congo, and that the first news of any accident that may have happened to Stanley must be brought by the Congo State messenger, who is expected to arrive at Borna in a few days.

DEATH OF KATKOFF.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 1.—M. Katkoff, editor of the Moscow Gazette, died to-day.

ARREARS OF RENT.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Lord Randolph Churchill and Mr. Chamberlain supported an amendment to the Land bill, proposed by Mr. Finlay, Liberal-Unionist, giving the court power to reduce the orders for payment of arrears of taxes by instalments. Lord Hartington said that although the amendment in question had been drawn with his consent, he thought it ought not to be pressed, as the Government had made many concessions since the amendment was framed. The amendment was rejected by a vote of 199 to 140.

IRISH CONSTABULARY.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Col. King Harman denied in the Commons this afternoon that there was any notable discontent among the men composing the Irish Constabulary. Of the number that had joined the force within the past three years 848 were Catholics and 460 were Protestants.

The Torrid Spell.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—There were twenty-six prostrations from heat here yesterday, nine proving fatal. From the 20th of June until the present time there have been but seven days in which the maximum temperature has been below 80 deg.; much of the time it has been above 90 deg.

ELECTION CASES.

THE Reform press is again teeming with personal abuse of Mr. Baird because the Conservatives of Queens County, N.B., have pronounced against the resignation of the seat.

Now we have always expressed our regret that Mr. Baird should have been returned, for we do not think that elections should be determined by technicalities. But our opinion is not conclusive, as it is not that of a court having jurisdiction, and we have not even all the facts of the case before us. It is possible that our opinion, though founded on a good general principle, is not justified in this particular case, and we are led to suspect this on the two grounds that Mr. King has not dared to submit his claim to the test of a legal investigation in the courts, and that the Conservatives of the constituency declare that Mr. Baird was not only technically elected but was also the genuine choice of the true majority. We know from the public records that the Reformers of Queens are not averse to the employment of technicalities if they can be used for their own benefit, for they put forth among others a claim to disfranchise a Conservative polling division because a slip of paper was not pasted over a key-hole.

We can hardly suppose that if Mr. King had felt he had a good case he would have refused to take it into court. The costs in a case of this nature would have been trifling, and surely his political friends who could subscribe to pay a number of deposits of candidates (perhaps Mr. King's among them) could have come to his assistance, if he had no money himself.

The main point, however, is the question of jurisdiction. If Mr. King had tried to contest the election in a Division Court or in the Dominion Supreme Court, would Mr. Baird be blamable for objecting? Successful protests against the jurisdiction of a particular court have often been made without any imputation being cast upon the defendant.

Mr. King, if wronged, had his legal remedy, of which it was not only his right but his duty to avail himself, and he deserves no sympathy because he has chosen not to push his claim as our law provides.

We repeat that we regret Mr. Baird's return, and regret that his constituents have determined that he should not resign. But if there has been a failure of justice it is due either to the refusal of Mr. King to submit his case to a law court, or perhaps to the persuasions of party friends who thought they could make more political capital out of unfair appeals to the people than out of a thorough exposure in court of all the circumstances.

Of one thing we are more convinced than ever, that it was a wise policy for Parliament to relegate election questions to the courts of law and we hope it will not resume them so as to throw them back into the political arena.

"IT is absurd for Tories to object to Mr McIntyre because he is not a good enough Reformer." A number of Reform papers have said that, in different forms, as though it was very funny. The Conservatives do not object to Mr. McIntyre because he is not a staunch supporter of the Reform party, but they cannot help feeling disgusted with a party which shouts:—"The Canadian Pacific railway is a grinding monopoly; it is bleeding the federal treasury; driving Manitoba into rebellion, getting rich on the spoils taken from the people, it has too much influence in Parliament, and its owners are building fine houses at the expense of the public; and now," after taking breath, "hurrah! and let us honor another of its owners with a seat in Parliament." It is the unblushing inconsistency of the Reform party that is objected to.

IT is a sad sight to see a man going through life trembling lest at the next corner the ghost of some murdered principle shall rise up to deride him.—Chatham Banner.

Only persons possessing a conscience are troubled by such ghosts. That is why certain Reform politicians are not always troubled worse than was Richard in his dream.

THE Detroit News says that commercial union would open to Detroit "a market of two million consumers from whom she is now shut out by arbitrary fiat of government." The "arbitrary fiat" is the Canadian tariff, adopted and maintained by the vote of the Canadian people. The News wants the duties removed, which, it says, "would substantially double the territory which would be tributary" to Detroit. The News is probably right in saying that Detroit would receive "a boom," but how would booming that city at the expense of Canadian business centres and business men benefit Canada?

COMMERCIAL UNION.

Commercial Union with the States is a generous thought, but it is not the best business policy of this country. It is not getting the advantage of a foreign free trade policy, as some think, but a more unsuitable form of protection than we have now. While it will kill many of our local industries, it will not raise the price of many classes of goods which go to make Canada a cheaper country to live in than the States. The future profits of this country will be derived from its commerce abroad rather than from its home trade on this continent, and our true policy to this end is a gradual reduction rather than an increase of our duties as our manufactures develop to the manhood point. Why, to-day in the woollen goods branch our large mills manufacture a better class at a given price than the American mills, and if it were not for the prohibitive tariff we could sell our better grades of goods anywhere in the States under their prices. Then Commercial Union will be so much the better, say the advocates of that policy. Not so, the moment we are obliged to adopt the American foreign tariff our Cape wool, our Australian wool, and dozens of items of mill supplies will cost double their present prices, and up must go the cost of manufacturing and the price of goods to our own people. A grade of Cape wool which sells at 28 to 30 cents in Boston can be got at 15 to 16 cents in Montreal. If we had to adopt the American tariff our woollen mills would be forced to go to Texas for a wool less suited to our purposes and higher in price.

The American tariff on woolen goods ranges from 47 to 75 per cent. Our duties average less than 30 per cent., yet our woolen industries are relatively more sound and have a better future before them. This is a circumstance which should give commercial unionists pause. The fact is we have a better arranged and more reasonable tariff. In modifying our commercial policy—whether as to manufactures or raw material—we must not forget that in the future our business is to be with the wide world and not merely with the American union.—Canadian Journal of Fabrics.

IRELAND.

Mr. Thomas M'Lean, the aged proprietor of the hotel at Dunfanaghy, has been found dead in his bedroom.

On July 2nd a blacksmith named Wm. Gibbs died from the effects of a fall into the river close to Grattan Quay, Waterford.

The vacant seat at the Board of National Education in Ireland has been given to Mr. Inglis, J. P., a member of the Presbyterian community.

There died on July 8th, at the Manse, Bovedy, County Derry, the Rev. James Gilmour, pastor of the Presbyterian congregation there.

Hot weather, accompanied by great drought, throughout Ireland, has told against the flax crop, and in consequence the most of it will be short.

The Directors of the Provincial Bank of Ireland on the 15th July, declared a dividend of 10 per cent. per annum for the half year ending July 30th.

The Right Rev. Dr. O'Callaghan lately laid the foundation stone of a new Temperance Hall for the North Parish, on St. Mary's Road, Cork, facing the Cathedral.

The four Irish counties with greatest acreage are: Galway, 1,502,561 acres; Mayo, 1,318,129; Donegal, 1,190,268; Kerry, 1,159,355; Cork comes next, and then Tipperary.

A the eviction of David Doran, gentleman farmer, near Kenmare, on July 6th, a shot was fired through the shut doors at the bailiffs. Mr. Doran was afterwards arrested.

The long spell of excessive heat in Ireland terminated on July 4th, with a fall of rain, and the atmosphere is much cooler. Prayers for rain were offered up on the previous Sunday in some of the churches.

The anniversary of the battle of the Boyne was celebrated on an extensive scale throughout Ulster on July 12th. In Belfast the turn-out of Orangemen to commemorate the event was larger than for many years past.

The mail train from cork left the rails at Bantry terminus on July 7th, and went over the embankment. The guard, fireman, engine-driver, and a passenger were seriously injured, and the carriages were smashed to pieces.

Judge O'Brien, on July 4th, at the Assize stated that there was no improvement in County Clare since the last court. "County Clare possessed," said his lordship, "the bad distinction of being the worst part of Ireland."

At the Tyrone Assize on July 13th, Eliza George, a middle aged woman, was sentenced to death, for the wilful murder of her infant child, which she buried in a ditch, where it was discovered by a dog seven months afterwards.

A constable stationed at Kilrush, has resigned on account of the duties the Coercion Bill, when it becomes law, will impose upon the constabulry. It is stated that many resignations will take place, as there is a strong feeling of dissatisfaction among the police in this county.

SHE TOLD ME.

She told me not to love her,
And I didn't any more;
But I held the shade above her
As we walked upon the shore,
And I then began to love her
Precisely as before.

She told me not to meet her
At moonlight on the sand;
But nothing could be sweeter
Than even that command,
And so I dared to meet her
And take her by the hand.

She told me, too, that dancing
She greatly did abhor;
But soon we two were prancing,
The rulers of the floor,
And then I wished the dancing
Would last forevermore.

She told me that she hated
My mean persistency,
And so I calmly waited,
But scarcely left her free,
Hoping the man she hated
I might not chance to be.

She told me to avoid her,
An order I should heed;
But I, who had enjoyed her
Sweet presence, felt its need,
And so I did avoid her—
Her absence, yes, indeed.

She told me that to marry
Was quite against her plan;
But schemes like that miscarry,
As many another can;
So now she means to marry,
And I am to be the man.

Withdrew From the Knights.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 1.—The Brewers' Local Assembly, 9,086, has left the Knights of Labor and formed themselves into Union No. 7 of the International Beer Brewers' Association.

CAN DO WITHOUT IT.

If Commeecial Union is to be beneficial why not teach the Americans to believe in it and have them invite us to go in with them. The arguments used to convince us Canadians are that we can't do without it, and, as a consequenue, must go to Washington and beg for a treaty. If Hon. Geo. Brown were still alive he could give us a pointer about going to Washington. He went there once to say that we could not do without reciprocity. They told him to go home and soak his head. What did they care whether Canada could live or not.—Whitby Chronicle (Reform).

AFTER THE SPOILS.

The Mercier Government in Quebec is acting pretty largely on the principle of "to the victors belong the spoils." The entire Commissions of the Peace for Kamouraska, Temiscouata, Chicoutimi and Saugenay, have been revoked. It is expected, when the new commission is gazetted supporters of the late Tory Government will all be left off. As time advances Mr. Mercier feels stronger entrenched in his position, and takes bolder ground in dealing with his opponents.—Newmarket Era (Reform).

NO GAIN TO THE FARMER.

The more the question (Commercial Union) is looked into and the more its true inwardness is developed, the more confident are we that it can have no permanent hold upon the people of this country. Even in the case of the farmer the advantages claimed are far more than offset by the inevitable disadvantages, leaving out of account altogether the political aspect of the question, which is a most important one.—Galt Reformer (Reform).

OVER WORKED Women

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGAR

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc

now, she said, tell me what you mean."

Thereon Jantje began at the beginning and related the events of the day, so far as he was acquainted with them. When he came to where the old man was dragged, with kicks and blows and ignominy, from his own house, Jess' eyes flashed, and she positively ground her teeth with indignation; and as for her feelings, when she learned that he was condemned to death and to be shot at dawn on the morrow, they simply baffled description. Of the Bessie complication Jantje was quite ignorant, and could only tell her that Frank Muller had an interview with her sister in the little plantation, and that after that she was shut up in the store room, where she still was. But this was quite enough for Jess, who knew Muller's character better, perhaps, than anybody else, and was not by any means ignorant of his designs upon Bessie. A few moments' thought put the key of the matter into her hand. She saw now what was the reason of the granting of the pass and of the determined and partially successful attempt at wholesale murder of which they had been the victims. She saw, too, why her old uncle had been condemned to death—that was to be used as a lever with Bessie; the man was capable even of that. Yes, she saw it all as clear as daylight; and in her heart she swore, helpless as she seemed to be, that she would find a way to prevent it. But what way? what way? Ah, if only John were here! But he was not, so she must act without him, if only she could see the way to action. She thought first of all of going down boldly and facing Muller and denouncing him as a murderer before his men; but a moment's reflection showed that this was impracticable. For his own safety he would be obliged to stop her mouth somehow, and the best she could expect would be to be incarcerated and rendered quite powerless. If only she could manage to communicate with Bessie! At any rate, it was absolutely necessary that she should know what was going on. She might as well be a hundred miles away as a hundred yards.

"Jantje," she said, "tell me where the Boers are."

"Some are in the wagon house, missie, some are on sentry, and the rest are down by the wagon they brought with them and outspanned behind the gums there. The cart is there, too, that came just before you did, with the clergyman in it."

"And where is Frank Muller?"

"I don't know, missie; but he brought a round tent with him in the wagon, and it is pitched between the two big gums."

"Jantje, I must go down there and find out what is going on, and you must come with me."

"You will be caught, missie. There is a sentry at the back of the wagon house and two in front. But," he added, "perhaps we might get near. I will go out and look at the night."

Presently he returned and said that a "small rain" had come on and the clouds covered up the stars so that it was very dark.

"Well, let us go at once," said Jess.

"Missie, you had better not go," answered the Hottentot. "You will get wet and the Boers will catch you. Better let me go. I can creep about like a snake, and if the Boers catch me it won't matter."

"You must come too, but I am going. I must find out."

Then the Hottentot shrugged his shoulders and yielded, and, having extinguished the candle, silently as ghosts they crept out into the night.

CHAPTER XXXII.

HE SHALL DIE.

The night was still and very dark. A soft, cold rain; such as one often gets in the Wakkerstroom and New Scotland districts of the Transvaal, and which more resembles a true north country mist than anything else, was falling gently but persistently. This condition of affairs was as favorable as possible to their enterprise, and under cover of it the Hottentot and the white girl crept far down the hill to within twelve or fourteen paces of the back of the wagon house. Then Jantje, who was leading, suddenly put back his hand and checked her, and at that moment Jess caught the sound of a sentry's footsteps as he tramped leisurely up and down. For a couple or minutes or so they stopped thus, not knowing what to do, when suddenly a man came round the corner of the building holding a lantern in his hand. On seeing the lantern Jess' first impulse was to fly, but Jantje, by a motion, made her understand that she was to stop still. The man with the lantern advanced toward the other man, holding the light above his head, and looking dim and gigantic in the mist and rain. Presently he turned his face, and Jess saw that it was Frank Muller himself. He stood thus for a moment waiting till the sentry was near to him.

"You can go to your supper," he said. "Come back in half an hour. I will be responsible for the prisoners till then."

The man growled out an answer, something about the rain, and then departed round the end of the building, followed by Muller.

"Now then, come on," whispered Jantje; "there is a hole in the store room wall, and you may be able to speak to Missie Bessie."

Jess did not require a second invitation, but slipped up to the wall in five seconds. Passing her hand over the stonework, she found the air hole, which she remembered well, for they used to play bo-peep there as children, and was about to whisper through it, when suddenly the door at the other end opened, and Frank Muller entered, bearing the lantern in his hand. For a moment he stood on the threshold, opening the slide of the lantern in order to increase the light. His hat was off, and he had a cape of dark cloth thrown over his shoulders, which seemed to add to his great breadth, and the thought flashed through the mind of Jess as she looked at him through the hole and the light struck upon his face and form, and glinted down his golden beard, that he was the most magnificent specimen of humanity she had ever seen. In another instant he had turned the lantern round and revealed her dear sister Bessie to her gaze. Bessie was seated upon one of the half empty sacks of mealies, apparently half asleep, for she opened her wide blue eyes and looked round apprehensively like one suddenly awakened. Her golden curls were in disorder and falling over her fair forehead, and her face was very pale and troubled, and marked beneath the eyes with deep blue lines. Catching sight of her visitor, she rose hurriedly and retreated as far from him as the pile of sacks and potatoes would allow.

"What is it?" she said, in a low voice. "I gave you my answer. Why do you come to torment me again?"

He placed the lantern upon an upright sack of mealies, and carefully balanced it before he answered. Jess could see that he was taking time to consider.

"Let us recapitulate," he said, at length, in his full, rich voice. "The position is this. I gave you this morning the choice between consenting to marry me to-morrow and seeing your old uncle and benefactor shot. Further, I assured you that if you would not consent to marry me your uncle should be shot, and that I would then make you mine, dispensing with the ceremony of marriage. Is that not so?"

Bessie made no answer, and he continued, his eyes fixed upon her face and thoughtfully stroking his beard.

"Silence gives consent. I will go on. Before a man can be shot according to law he must be tried and condemned according to law. Your uncle has been tried and has been condemned."

"I heard it all, cruel murderer that you are," said Bessie, lifting her head for the first time.

"So! I thought you would, through the crack. That is why I had you put into this place; it would not have looked well to bring you before the court," and he took the light and examined the crevice. "This place is badly built," he went on, in a careless tone; "look, there is another space there at the back," and he actually came up to it and held the lantern close to it so that the light from it shone through into Jess' eyes and nearly blinded her. She shut them quickly, so that the gleam reflected from them should not betray her, and then held her breath and remained as still as the dead. In another second he took away the light and replaced it on the mealie bag.

By proper, healthful exercise, and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, which contains the healing and strengthening virtues of these two valuable specifics in their fullest form. FENELON FALLS.

BURGLARY.—A burglar, we learn from the Gazette, entered the bar of the Mansion House on Saturday morning and carried off the till, containing $22, postage stamps and papers, also some cigars, a bottle of moxie and a cornet.

DROWNED.—On Saturday evening a little boy, not quite two years, old son of Mr. James Todd, was drowned in the Government race. The body of the little fellow was recovered about ten o'clock, a search having been instituted when he was missed.

PORT HOPE.

STUNG ON THE TONGUE.—Care should be taken by lovers of the luscious raspberry, when enjoying themselves in a raspberry patch, that there be no lurking bee on the fruit before it is put into the mouth. Instances have occurred where a sting on a man's tongue has caused death. On Sunday last such a painful accident happened to Mr. James Calcutt, who, while eating berries, was stung on his tongue. He suffered considerably, but the swelling was reduced by applications of clay, raw onion and blueing.—Times.

They would have the farmers believe that political economy has conspired against him that he pays the duty upon that which he consumes as well as upon that which he produces, that he is now the victim of a "heads I win, tails you lose" game. Now, a good deal of this kind of talk is sheer nonsense, and the farmers are too intelligent not to see it.—Galt Reformer (Reform.)

As the above day will be "Recreation Day" at the Park a programme has been prepared consisting of games at lawn tennis and croquet, ladies' and gentlemen's rowing matches, and a pyrotechnical display in the evening. Tickets for the round trip $1.75, good for two days. d22

An Empty Void.

A few days ago some campers dumped off a keg partly filled with beer at Nassau on their return trip from the lake, not wishing to bring it to town. A trio heard of it and on going up set out in quest of the keg. They found it empty, and in the meantime the train had moved out leaving them to strike out the rest of the way the best way they could.

Obituary.

At shortly after noon to-daw Mr. W. A. Morrow, a well known and well respected citizen died. For a long time he has been suffering from lung troubles and has gradually sunk till his sufferings were ended to-day. The deceased has been a citizen of Peterborough for the last ten years or thereabout, but lived all his life in or near Peterborough. Since taking his residence here he has occupied prominent positions, among others the Secretaryship of the Board of Education and the Recording Stewardship of the Charlotte Street Methodist Church. The deceased was a man of unobtrusive habits, quiet demeanor and of Christian character. He leaves a bereaved wife, sister of Mrs. Geo. A. Cox, and three children.

W. C. T. U.

The regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. was held on Monday, Aug. 1st, at 4 p. M., in their own hall. The President took charge of the devotional exercises. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. The Treasurer's report was read and accepted. It was resolved to forward to Mrs. J. W. Flavelle an expression of regret at her withdrawal from the Union, and of grateful appreciation of services rendered as Treasurer during the past year. After some discussion it was decided to have lunch prepared in their hall next Wednesday, for visitors who may favor them with a call. It was resolved to ask lady friends for contributions for said entertainment. A special meeting was appointed for next Monday afternoon to complete arrangements for Wednesday.

RIVERSIDES WIN.

The Orillia Juniors Defeated by Four to One.

On Monday afternoon a lacrosse match was played in the Riverside Park between the Orillia Juniors and the Riversides for the Central District Championship.

The teams took their places on the field at three o'clock as follows:—

ORILLIA.		RIVERSIDES.
Frost	Goal	Rogers
Quinn	Point	Rose
Washburn	Cover Point	Butler
Carss	1st defense	Maher
Peard	2nd "	Halpin
Mathews	3rd "	Pakenham
Stewart	Centre Field	Larone
Tudhope	Home Field	Phelan
Haw	" "	Begley
Kennedy	" "	Neil
W. Peard	Inside Home	M. Larone
Maundrell	Outside Home	Duncan

Mr. H LeBrun, the referee, stooped between the two centres and the next minute Larone drew the ball. It went immediately down to the Orillia goal and stayed there some time. A succession of drop shots were made but they were unsuccessful. At last Tudhope captured it and sent it to the other end of the field. It quickly returned and loitered between centre and the Orillias goal till Neil passed to Begley and the latter put it through the stakes. Time 18 minutes.

The next game neither centre drew the ball, but in the scrimage which ensued Peterborough had the advantage. After a few minutes play by the Peterboroughs home the rubber got into the sticks of the defense. Pakenham gave it to Maher who made a pretty shot on goal. Begley, Neil, Phelan and Larone in turn assaulted the goal, but unsuccessfuly. Finally Neil swiped it through in a scrimage from a drop shot by Larone. Time 32 minutes.

The third game lasted twenty-eight minutes. In it the Orillias appeared to be more equal opponents. The rubber careered from end to end of the ground. Rose and Halpin put in good work by deft play and long runs. Butler's and Maher's play also did good service to the Riversides. Rogers, however, had an easy task. Not once during the first two games, and only once one time during the third did the ball get anywhere near the Riversides goal. After 28 minutes play Neil again put it through.

The fourth game was short and decisive, only four minutes elapsed from the facing of the ball till the umpire declared game for Orillia.

Fifteen minutes more play brought the match to an end by Duncan scoring another goal for the Riversides.

The play was very square all round. There was an absence of roughness and, though not general, the team play showed up very nicely at times.

The Riversides are confident of their bringing the championship to town this fall. They are equal to any club as far as the play has gone, and the defeat Orillia said to be the best in the league, gives further assurance.

A. C. A. CAMP.

The Meeting of the Northern Division at Stoney Lake.

A.C.A. CAMP, JUNIPER ISLAND, Aug. 1.—To-day the first meeting of the newly formed Northern Division of the American Canoe Association was opened with every promise of success.

Col. H. C Rogers as Vice-Commodore of the Norther Division hoisted his flag on the old site of the head quarters of the A. C. A. in 1883, and the meeting begun. A number of enthusiastic canoeists had, however, anticipated the date. Besides members of the home clubs, the Lakefield C. C., the Peterboroug C.C., and the Otonabee C. C. the first clubs to put in an appearance were the Ubique C. C. and the Toronto C. C., detachments from them arriving on Saturday followed not long after by the Bobcaygeon C.C. and the Lindsay C. C. Each of these clubs reports the speedy arrival of other members.

The ladies' camps have also been started promptly, groups of tents along the island showing that several parties have already arrived, and others are expected. There are also many camping parties on the other islands, and all the numerous summer cottages appear to be occupied.

Of course the first day of the meet is devoted to perfecting the arrangements of the Association and for the members as they arrive to provide for the comfort of themselves and the safety of their canoes. Mr. R. C. Strickland, with the other members of the regatta committee, Messrs. Edwards, Lindsay C. C., and McKendrick, Ubique C. C., have, with Commodore Rogers, been out in the Undine laying down the buoys for the races.

There is already a good attendance, but the arrivals have little more than begun, and it will certainly be a busy scene.

Arrangements have been made for a special postoffice at the camp store, where Mr. Elfett seems to have his hands and those of his assistants quite full to supply the various wants of his numerous customers, whom he always seems to be able to satisfy from his plentiful and well selected stock.

Messrs. Ed. Wood and W. A. Dixon left town this morning for Albany, N. Y. From there they will down the Hudson and proceed down the coast as far as Newport, R.I.

Mr. H. DeBrun has been fortunate in winning another £20 oil painting from the Art Union.

Mr. J. D. Mellmoyle, Principal of the Separate School, has been spending a very pleasant holiday down the St. Lawrence He returned on Monday evening.

Mr. G. B. Sproule intends to take a trip to Stoney Lake to take views of camp life. Though he has always had the best of instruments he is not satisfied and he has ordered a new one specially for the occasion. Mr. Sproule will take his trip northward in a few days.

Messrs. T. Howthorn and R. Patterson have passed the matriculation examination in Toronto University.

Mr. R. McCallum, who has been away for some years, is in town on a visit.

The presentation of the freedom of the burgh of Arbroath to Mr. Andrew Lowson, manufacturer and flax-spinner there, took place in the town hall on July 13th.

Mr. Alexander Moody Stuart, advocate, has been appointed Professor of Scots Law in the University of Glasgow, in room of Mr. Robert Berry, recently appointed Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

The old colours of the Seaforth Highlanders were on July 13th formally handed over to the care of the Provost of the town of Dingwall, Ross-shire, the ceremony being witnessed by a numerous crowd, and the proceedings marked by great enthusiasm.

Owing to agitation and agricultural depression, land has become quite a drug in the market. On July 13th six Scotch estates, comprising 119,000 acres, situated in different parts of the country, were exposed for sale, and not a single offer was made for any of them.

The Earl of Mar and Kellie is dissatisfied with the several decisions in his favour, and has presented another petition to the House of Lords for an investigation into the connection between the Mar estates and the ancient Mar dignity, with the view to "obtain an unprejudiced re-hearing in a court of law of his rights to the estates of Mar." He has already been awarded both the estates and the title.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

On Monday, July 11th, the Crofters Commission opened their court in the island of Tiree, belonging to the Duke of Argyll, who was represented by his chamberlain, and the crofters by a Glasgow lawyer. The proceedings will be watched with unusual interest by the public generally.

Band.

The Fire Brigade Band presented a delightful programme of music in the Gardens on Tuesday evening. There was as usual, a large number of people out to enjoy the music and the coolness of the evening.

Board of Education.

A meeting of the Board of Education was called for Tuesday evening, but on account of the death of the Secretary no meeting was held. Arrangements were made to attend the funeral and it was decided to meet on Friday evening.

Victoria Rifles Band.

The citizens of Peterborough will seldom have the chance of hearing such a band as that of the Victoria Rifles, Montreal There will doubtless be large numbers in attendance at the concerts to be given in the P. A. A. grounds on Tuesday and Wednesday evening.

Corn.

Edinburgh street is getting notorious regarding the rearing of corn. Mr. Coulter has a stock that beats Mr. Earl's by nearly three feet. It measures 9 feet three inches. Mr. Coulter's stock has, however, had a couple of weeks growth the start of Mr. Earl's.

Canton Peterborough.

A special meeting of the members and all Patriarchs who wish to join the Canton will be held in Peterborough Lodge room this evening at 7.30 sharp, for important business. A full meeting is particularly requested. By order, R. J KIDD.

More Destruction.

Mr. Blade, caretaker of the Gardens, has been subjected to further annoyance. This morning he found that in his absence in the Central Park, a beautiful bed of coxcombs had been destroyed by dogs. The plants were beaten down and bent over in such a way as to completely disfigure the bed. Mr. Blade says that the bed destroyed a few days ago was worth $40 and that the damage done to this one is fully $15. Added to this a fine bed of pansies, opposite St. Paul's Church, has been so badly injured that it will have to be replanted. If the Horticultural Society wish to have any flowers at all left they should either keep Mr. Blade in the Gardens or get some one to stay there while he is at work in the Park.

To the Hotelmen.

The following circular has been printed and has, or will be, directed to the West Riding hotel keepers:—

Office of the Inspector of Licences for West Peterborough.
PETERBOROUGH, July 27th, 1887.

DEAR SIR,—I have reason to suspect that you are still continuing to sell intoxicating liquor, contrary to the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act, notwithstanding that you have been previously fined for a breach of the law.

Unless you conform strictly to the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act I shall be compelled to take more stringent measures to see that the law is strictly observed.

Unless you make up your mind to obey the law you must be prepared to take the consequences.

Yours truly,
GEORGE COCHRANE,
Inspector.

A. C. A. CAMP.

The Meeting of the Northern Division at Stoney Lake.

A.C.A. CAMP, JUNIPER ISLAND, Aug. 2.—There were numerous arrivals at camp, but chiefly local members or additions to clubs already represented. A portion of the time was occupied in decorating the various camps and there is now a brilliant display of bunting. Among the flags behind headquarters are the British ensign and the Stars and Stripes, as is appropriate to an international body, like the A. C. A.

There was a trial race in the morning, much fitting of sails and rigging and other preparations for a contest of speed and skill.

At noon the Vice-Commodore called a meeting of the Executive Committee to transact the necessary business. The following programme for the week was arranged:—This (Tuesday) evening camp fire at head quarters; Thursday, cruise to Eels Creek assembling at Head Quarters at 8 a. m.; Friday, review of the canoe fleet at 2.30 p. m. and illuminated parade in the evening; Saturday, regatta; Sunday, Divine Service at Head Quarters at 10 a. m. the Rev. G. L Neide officiating; Monday and Tuesday regatta.

Arrangements are being made, we learn, for a theatrical entertainment and a concert, but the dates have not yet been announced.

Among the arrivals by the noon steamer were the Rev. G. D. Neide of Cleveland, N. Y., one of the fathers of the Association, Messrs. E. K. C. and A. F. R. Martin of the Hamilton Canoe Club, and Mr. Hopkins of the Lindsay Canoe Club. Further arrivals are promised for to-morrow.

The regular fortnightly meeting of the Cheese Board was held on Tuesday afternoon in the market building. The offer was as follows:—

Bidding started at 8⅝ and went up to 9 11-16 for Peterborough county, this bid being Brentnell's. Several of the buyers refused to bid against Brentnell on account of the Victoria affair. Finally it was decided to adjourn for a week, the Victoria section, for which was offered 9¼ by Leary, being given permission to sell between this and then. Some of the Victoria men were dissatisfied with the discrepancy between the bids for the various sections. It was explained that it cost five cents more per 100 pounds to ship from Lindsay than from Peterborough.

Of Miss Minnie Begley's recitations it says that "this young lady's articulation, enunciation, expression and gesture give promise of high attainment in the histrionic art."

CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE.

The Verdict of the Coroner's Jury in the St. Thomas Disaster.

ST. THOMAS, Aug. 2.—The following is the verdict rendered by the coroner's jury at three o'clock this morning: "That the said Samuel G. Zeland and child, Mrs. Smithers and child, Mrs. Fraine and child, Mrs. Baynes and three children, came to their death through the criminal negligence of Henry Donnelly, engineer, and Richard Spettigue, conductor, of the ill-fated train. We, the jurymen empannelled to investigate the causes of the late terrible accident on June 15th, by which many lives were lost and others severely injured, and much valuable property destroyed, after hearing the evidence and carefully examining the same, have come to the conclusion that the said accident is due to the carelessness of the officials and employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the following several ways:—

"First—It is quite plain from the evidence adduced that the engineer was, on that day at all events, quite unfit for his duty, as for instance, the speed at which he ran the train into the corporation of the city of St. Thomas, without slacking at proper places; the the negligence of the conductor in not examining the air brakes before leaving Port Stanley, which, had it been done, might have prevented a disaster which has brought such desolation into so many homes, and further had there been an inspector, as there ought to have been, at the port, such serious consequences might have been averted. The drowning of a young lady of London at Port Stanley, is another direct result of this disaster. Another point to which we would call attention, is the practice of officials of the company in not providing sufficient seating accommodation for people on excursion trains. The evidence of one of the brakemen went to show that there were so many caildren on the platform of the cars making a noise that he could not tell whether the whistle blew or not, and on being asked if there was not room for them inside, he answered in the negativ ; and further that said officials of the company allow their trains to run too fast in a city for the safety of the public."

Signed by the Coroner and twelve jurors.

MR. DILLON COMPLAINS.

He Says his Misrepresented and asks the Speakers Protection.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—In the House of Commons this evening Mr. Dillon complained of a statement that appeared in a provincial paper, which he suspected was supplied by a Consertative member, charging him in a recent debates with laughing in approval of the stoning of a daughter of the agent of Lord Sligo during a school procession in Belfast Mr. Dillon said he made it a rule not to notice newspaper assertions, but this offensive and disgusting passage was too much for him. (Conservative cries of "It is true.")

Mr. Dillon: "Who says it is true? It is absolutely false."

Mr. Halsey:—"I say it is true. I distinctly remember the occurrence."

Mr. Mclean of Oldham:—"I heard it, too."

Mr. Webster:;—"So do I."

Mr. Price:—"And I also."

Mr. Dillon:—"I say it is false against the four of you." (Cries of "Order "and Home Rule cheers.)

Mr. Dillon:—"It is part of a system of infamous and atrocious falsehood by which an attempt is being made to hunt the Irish members out of public life." (Home Rule hears.)

The Speaker:—'Order. You must not make such charges against members."

Mr. Dillon: "I have reason to suppose that the offensive passage was supplied by a member. No more atrocious an accusation could be made, yet other members shout that it is true. Are Iris members to have any protection here? I heard the speaker call members to order for language which beside this sinks into insignificance."

The Speaker: "I am the judge of order here. The members who said that the accusation is true put their own voice in upon what passed during the debate referred to."

Mr. Maclean, amid an uproar, maintained that when the assault upon the girl was mentioned laughter was heard among the Parnellites, and that Conservative members indignantly cried "shame." The fact would be found mentioned in the House reports. He would acquit Mr. Dillon of sharing in the laughter if he repudiated such conduct.

Mr. Dillon—You misrepresent what occurred. I ask justice at the Speaker's hands. The accusation ought to be withdrawn. If charges of this character are allowed to be hurled against us there will be an end to all public decency and order in Parliament.

The Speaker:—"The laughter which members declare they heard was meant to be interpreted in an offensive sense. If Mr. Dillon repudiates the statement the House can accept the repudiation."

Mr. Dillon insisted that this was insufficient. He demanded the protection of the Chair in the withdrawal of the charges, or that the Speaker require the members to withdraw.

The Speaker:—"Order. I have settled the incident."

Mr. Dillon:—"These measures of justice are for one set of members, and there is no justice for another set." (Home Rule cheers.)

The debate on the Land Bill was then resumed.

Suicide at Amherstburg.

AMHERSTBURG, Aug. 2.—Mrs. Robbins, wife of Col. G. C. Robbins, the well known assayer and mining engineer, committed suicide yesterday at her residence, below this place, by shooting herself with a small pistol. She had been troubled with softening of the brain for some time. Col. Robbins is at present in Eureka, Nevada, looking after mining interests, and her son, Frank C., only left for California last week, being engaged by New York capitalists to examine mines.

LATEST CABLE NEWS.

THAT AMERICAN-CHINESE BANK.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The published statement that Jay Gould had, in conjunction with a ring of silver speculators, established an American-Chinese bank in Shanghai created a great sensation here. All of yesterday afternoon's papers comment freely on the story, and are generally inclined to believe there is something in it. The Pall Mall Gazette hesitates to believe that the conditions under which the bank is established, especially as to its sweeping power, in the administration of the fiscal affairs of the Chinese Government are correctly stated, but says the statement as to the amount of capital is undoubtedly true. Still it thinks the news ought to have first come from New York, instead of being cabled to that city from London, but candidly adds that it would be very bad for English financiers if the reports should be confirmed.

THE EGYPTIAN CONVENTION.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—M. Flourens, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has sent a circular to foreign agents regarding the Egyptian Convention. He says that after the rejection of the convention there was a noticeable spirit of conciliation manifested by England. The convention's two points were: First, the abandonment of the Sultan's suzerainty to a Christian power; second, the absence of a specified date for the evacuation of Egypt by the British He believes that if negotiations are renewed it will be easy to arrive at a useful result by avoiding these difficulties. He concludes by expressing the hope that Lord Salisbury will not deceive himself regarding French sentiment on the subject. There is nothing hostile, he says, in his policy. France continues to desire a settlement according to the wishes of all the powers.

SUPPRESSION OF THE LEAGUE.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—It is stated on good authority that the object of the Government in proclaiming the whole of Ireland under the Crimes Act, instead of excluding Ulster from its operation, as it was generally expected would be done, was to reach all branches of the National League. This step taken, nothing further in the way of pronunciamento is necessary toward suppressing the organization as far as the Government is able to accomplish its suppression, and it is definitely known that the Irish magistrates and police will be ordered to terminate the existence of the League during the last week of the parliamentary session.

TREVELYAN ELECTED.

FIRE IN MONTREAL.

Fifty Families Homeless—The Loss Estimated at $100,000.

MONTREAL, Aug. 2.—Early this evening a fire broke out in the rear of Paquett's grocery store, on St. Hypolite-street, St. Jean Baptiste Ward, and before it could be got under control the buildings on both sides of St. Dominique, from Napoleon, to St. Jean Baptiste streets, the west sides of St. Hypolite and those in rear of the east side of St. Lawrence-street, were destroyed and about fifty families rendered homeless. This is one of the streets in connection with the drain of which charges of a boodle combine were made against the Road Department contractors, and the people throwing their goods into the open drain saved much of them from the fierce flames. The upper part of the police station was gutted.

Paquette, in whose place the fire originated, was insured for $3100, but in most cases there was no insurance. The families rendered homeless are mostly poor people. The buildings were largely wooden, a number being wood and brick and a few built entirely of brick. The damage is estimated at $100,000.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1887.

IMPORTANT DISTINCTIONS.

THE decision of the Judicial Committee in the Quebec tax case is now published in full. Besides other points of interest it contains the views of the final court of appeal on the veto power, as provided by our constitution. Lord Hobhouse, who delivered judgment, said:—

"It was quite impossible to argue from the one case to the other. Their lordships had to construe the express words of an Act of Parliament, which made an elaborate distribution of the whole field of legislative authority between two legislative bodies, and, at the same time, provided for the federated Provinces a carefully balanced constitution, under which no one of the parts could pass laws for itself except under the control of the whole acting through the Governor-General; and the question they had to answer was whether the one body or the other had power to make a good law."

This was in answer to the contention that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States should have great weight in the present case. Their lordships pointed out the difference between the constitutions of the two countries as a reason why they could not draw such conclusions, the circumstances being different. The Privy Council in interpreting our written constitution, the British North American Act, gives no encouragement to the Reform claim (when in Opposition) that the veto power should only be used against unconstitutional legislation, that is when it would be unnecessary as merely doing work within the jurisdiction of the law courts. The highest court in the British Empire plainly recognises the meaning and policy of the power of disallowance as a provision, to use its own words, "under which no one of the parts could pass laws for itself except under the control of the whole acting through the Governor-General." This is the Canadian plan for holding the country together as a whole, instead of letting it act as discordant and heterogenuous sections, a plan differing from that of the United States with written restrictions to be enforced by the Supreme Court, supplemented, as we have seen, by civil war.

The Privy Council also plainly discriminates, as the Reformers (while in Opposition) do not, between the right of the Provinces to pass legislation and the reserved right of the Dominion to allow or disallow it. They found that Quebec had the right to legislate in the matter in dispute, but clearly intimated that the Dominion had the right to veto the legislation if it was considered judicious in the interests of the whole country.

THE Vancouver, B. C., Herald is not overjoyed on account of the anxiety the Toronto Mail showed to have United States markets opened to the British Columbians. The Herald says that lumber from that Province is finding a market east of the mountains and that it is desirable that more produce should be grown at home and less imported. It does not fear that fish from the Pacific will not find a market in Canada. It concludes its article with this sensible and patriotic observation:—"It is the plain duty of every Canadian to foster as much as possible interprovincial trade. Expensive means for this purpose has been provided, and it is in the interest of the whole country that they should be utilized."

SOME advocates of Commercial Union pretend that the United States would modify their tariff to suit Canadian views. But the Detroit News, appealing to a United States constituency, says:—"Commercial Union would not necessarily involve a reduction of present American duties. The Canadians who are favoring union are not demanding any reduction." So Canada is asked to place higher duties on imports from Great Britain and to admit imports from the United States free. The scheme is, free trade on one side, and a higher tariff on all others. And the United States would reap the benefit.

The Vermont Legislature, an exchange says, has been petitioned to pass a law whereby any person who shall occupy and improve any unoccupied or worn-out farm in the State shall be exempted from taxation for five years. How great an advantage it would be to the farmers of this country to have free access to the markets of a country which has to exempt men from taxation to get them to occupy deserted farms in the oldest settled portions of its territory. Such a law might be found necessary in Canada when our manufactures were removed through the effects of Commercial Union.

BEFORE DAWN.

On topmost bows of lofty trees
Birds sing beneath the golden stars,
Which pale before the coming dawn;
Naught else is heard save the dull rote
Of ocean on the shore, sounding
The same as erst at Nature's birth,
"When morning stars together sang;"
As if the organist in some
Cathedral vast, with minor keys
And pedals soft, filled holy space
With melodious monotone,
While some lone nun her matins chants,
In murmurs soft behind the screen.

A GOOD SCHOOL TRADE.

The Kind of Business Done by Candy and Cigarette Shops in New York.

"CANDY, cigars, stationery and notion store; doing good school trade. — East —— st."

"CANDY STORE, opposite big public school; first class trade in confectionery, cigarettes and stationery. Apply at — West —— st."

A young man with a few hundred dollars to invest answered several of these advertisements. In each case he found a small dingy shop with great heaps of painted candy, packages of cheap cigarettes and plentiful supplies of blood and thunder literature on the shelves. A few dusty school books completed the stock. In each case, too, the little shop was near a public school. Some nestled close up to the big buildings. Others were across the street or on corners diagonally situated. All were less than a stone's throw distant.

"Our trade comes almost exclusively from the school children," said the proprietor of one grimy little shop. "They are lively customers before and after school and at recess. This is the dull season, because vacation has just begun. Trade will pick up again in September. Then it is sure and steady until spring. Last year I made a net profit of no less than $1,200."

"The demand for school books must be pretty heavy."

"Oh, no; we sell very few school books."

"What do you sell that makes your trade so profitable?"

"Candy and cigarettes, principally. You'd be surprised at the quantity of candy those youngsters devour. The little boys and girls rush in here with their pennies and buy a stick of painted candy whenever they get the chance. All the larger boys buy a cigarette or two every day. It's only a penny business, of course, with penny profits. But when you take care of the pennies the dollars'll take care of themselves, you know. Why, I made $709 clear profit last year on candies alone. For, to tell the truth, the sweet stuff is the very cheapest sort. But the children like it just as well. I wouldn't sell out at all if it were not that I am going to leave town before fall, when trade will be resumed at its liveliest."

Similar statements were made by all the other candy store advertisers, and strong inducements to purchase were held out to the young man. Being of a nice moral sense, however, he decided not to invest in a business which seemed to him like corrupting the rising generation by supplying them with cheap and perhaps poisonous painted candy and cigarettes. This idea impressed him so strongly that he asked a school principal about it.

"You are right," said he. "This candy shop business is one of the most pernicious features of school life. We call the shops 'candy hells.' The red, green, blue and yellow coloring matter annually used in its manufacture would paint the town in alternate stripes from the Battery to Harlem bridge. Five cents' worth of the stuff would lay a professional athlete on his back for a week, but a forty-pound schoolboy can consume five cents' worth every day for six months and be a sixty-pound schoolboy at the end of that period. The ways of the infantile stomach are inscrutable, and even the candy shop cannot affect it. Still, these 'candy hells' are literally training schools for future generations of dyspeptics and men with handmade sets of teeth. But we are powerless to prevent it."—New York Sun.

Swedish Women at Home.

Swedish women are, in their own country, models of neatness. The private house at which Mr. Lancaster and myself had procured board was presided over by a widow lady named Ritzen, and the scrupulous cleanliness of the apartments we occupied was indeed marvelous. There were no carpets on the floor, but the latter were always kept beautifully clean, being daily and I might add almost hourly scrubbed by our hostess and her natty little maid servant, Frida.

There are many pretty faces to be met with in Sweden, although the beauty of a great many young girls is spoiled by defective teeth, due, I was informed, to their passion for sweetmeats. I was more than surprised to find among a people so noted for their religious convictions crimes, that in our country would inevitably send the offender to the penitentiary, were there almost wholly disregarded, and, in fact, looked upon as being nothing uncommon. The clergymen in Sweden appear to exercise wonderful control over their charges. In fact, no Italian priest could be more rigid in his surveillance of the morals of his people, and yet among the peasantry I was assured that not one in ten of the men ever dream of marrying a woman until they have both lived together for a period varying from one month to a year; still the ministers of the gospel strive hard to instruct these people in the evil of their ways, and annually meetings are held for the purpose of examining the peasants in reading and the catechism of their religion.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

A Bull Fight in Madrid.

By this time I thought I knew enough about bull fights, and I left the king and queen and their court to behold the other three combats without me, and went away to walk on the prado and reflect. My sympathies were all with the bulls. They were the only creatures who had no least show of fair play. They alone were doomed with absolute certainty from the start. Even the horses might escape; and at worst their torture was but for a moment. The men were only in just enough danger to make the thing exciting, and there were 99 chances out of 100 that they would escape scathless; but the bull, let him bear himself never so bravely, was to be made an end of.—Louise Chandler Moulton in The Cosmopolitan.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGAR

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc

[illegible] have shown you that I was in earnest. The old man took it well, did he not? He is a brave man and I respect him. I fancy that he will not move a muscle at the last. That comes of English blood, you see. It is the best in the world, and I am proud to have it in my veins."

"Cannot you stop torturing me and say what you have to say?" asked Bessie.

"I had no wish to torture you, but if you like I will come to the point. It is this. Will you now consent to marry me to-morrow morning at sun up, or am I to be forced to carry the sentence on your old uncle into effect?"

"I will not. I will not. I hate you and defy you."

Muller looked at her coldly, and then drew his pocketbook from his pocket and extracted from it the death warrant and a pencil.

"Look, Bessie," he said. "This is your uncle's death warrant. At present it is valueless and informal, for I have not yet signed, though, as you will see, I have been careful that everybody else should. If once I place my signature there it cannot be revoked, and the sentence must be carried into effect. If you persist in your refusal I will sign it before your eyes," and he placed the paper on the book and took the pencil in his right hand.

"Oh, you cannot, you cannot be such a fiend," wailed the wretched woman, wringing her hands.

"I assure you you are mistaken. I both can and will. I have gone too far to turn back for the sake of one old Englishman. Listen, Bessie. Your lover Niel is dead, that you know."

Here Jess behind the wall felt inclined to cry out "It is a lie!" but, remembering the absolute necessity of silence, checked herself.

"And, what is more," went on Muller, "your sister Jess is dead too; she died two days ago."

"Jess dead! Jess dead! It is not true. How do you know that she is dead?"

"Never mind; I will tell you when we are married. She is dead, and except for your uncle you are alone in the world. If you persist in this he will soon be dead too, and his blood will be upon your head, for you will have murdered him."

"And if I were to say yes, how would that help him?" she cried, wildly. "He is condemned by your court martial—you would only deceive me and murder him after all."

"On my honor, no. Before the marriage I will give this warrant to the pastor, and he shall burn it as soon as the service is said. But, Bessie, don't you see that those fools who tried your uncle are only like clay in my hands? I can bend them this way and that, and whatever the song I sing they will echo it. They do not wish to shoot your uncle, and will be glad, indeed, to get out of it. Your uncle shall go in safety to Natal, or stay here if he wills. His property shall be secured for him, and compensation paid for the burning of his house. I swear it before God."

She looked up at him, and he could see that she was inclined to believe him.

"It is true, Bessie, it is true—I will rebuild the place myself, and if I can find the man who fired it he shall be shot. Come, listen to me, and be reasonable. The man you loved is dead, and no amount of sighing can bring him to your arms. I alone am left—I, who love you better than life, better than man ever loved a woman before. Look at me, am I not a proper man for any maid to wed, though I be half a Boer? And I have the brains, too, Bessie, the brains that shall make us both great. We were made for each other—I have known it for years, and slowly, slowly, I have worked my way to you till at last you are in my reach," and he stretched out both his arms toward her.

"My darling," he went on, in a soft, half dreamy voice, "my love and my desire, yield, now—yield! Do not force this new crime upon me. I want to grow good for your sake, and have done with bloodshed. When you are my wife I believe that the evil will go out of me, and I shall grow good. Yield, and never shall woman have had such a husband as I will be to you. I will make your life soft and beautiful to you as women love life to be. You shall have everything that money can buy and power bring. Yield for your uncle's sake, and for the sake of the great love I bear you."

As he spoke he was slowly drawing nearer Bessie, whose face wore a half fascinated expression. As he came the wretched woman gathered herself together and put out her hand to repulse him. "No, no," she cried, "I hate you—I cannot be false to him, living or dead. I shall kill myself—I know I shall."

He made no answer, but simply came always nearer, till at last his strong arms closed round her shrinking form and drew her to him as easily as though she were a babe. And then all at once she seemed to yield. That embrace was the outward sign of his cruel mastery, and she struggled no more, mentally or physically.

"Will you marry me, darling—will you marry me?" he whispered, with his lips so close to the golden curls that Jess, straining her ears outside, could only just catch the words:

"Oh, I suppose so; but I shall die—it will kill me."

He strained her to his heart and kissed her beautiful face again and again, and next moment Jess heard the footsteps of the returning sentry and saw him leave go of her. Jantje, too, caught her by the hand and dragged her away from the wall, and in ten seconds more she was once more ascending the hillside toward the Hottentot's kennel. She had gone to find out how matters lay, and she had, indeed, found out. To attempt to portray the fury, the indignation and the thirst to be avenged upon the fiend who had attempted to murder her and her lover, and had bought her dear sister's honor at the price of her innocent old uncle's life, would be impossible. All her weariness was forgotten; she was mad with what she had seen and heard, with the knowledge of what had been done and what was about to be done. She even forget her passion in it, and swore that Muller should never marry Bessie while she lived to prevent it. Had she been a bad woman she might have seen herein an opportunity, for Bessie once married to Muller. John would be free to marry her, but the idea never even entered her mind. Whatever Jess' errors may have been, she was a self sacrificing, honorable woman, and would have died rather than take such an advantage. Presently they reached the shelter again and crept in.

"[illegible] a candle," said Jess.

Jantje fumbled about and finally struck a match. The bit of candle they had been using, however, was nearly burned out, so from the rubbish in the corner he produced a box full of "ends," some of them three or four inches long. Jess, in that queer sort of way in which trifles do strike us when the mind is undergoing a severe strain, instantly remembered that for years she had been unable to discover what became of the odd pieces of the candles used in the house. Now the mystery was explained.

"Now go outside and leave me. I want to think."

The Hottentot obeyed, and, seated there upon the heap of skins, her forehead resting on her hand and her fingers run through her silky hair, now wet with the rain, she began to review the position. It was evident to her that Frank Muller would be as good as his word. She knew him too well to doubt it for a moment. If Bessie did not marry him he would murder the old man, as he had tried to murder her and John, only this time judicially, and then abduct her afterward. Bessie was the only price that he was prepared to take in exchange for her uncle's life. But it was impossible to allow Bessie to be so sacrificed; the thought was horrible to her.

How, then, was it to be prevented? She thought again of going down and confronting Frank Muller, and openly accusing him of her attempted murder, only, however, to dismiss the idea. Who would believe her? and if they did believe, what good would it do? She would only be imprisoned and kept out of harm's way, or possibly murdered without further ado. Then she thought of attempting to communicate with her uncle and Bessie, to tell them that John was, so far as she knew, alive, only to recognize the impossibility of doing so now that the sentry was back. Besides, what object could be served? The knowledge that John was alive might, it is true, nerve up Bessie to resist Muller, but then the sole result would be that the old man would be shot. Dismissing this from her mind, she began to consider whether they could obtain assistance. Alas! it was impossible. The only people from whom she could hope for help would be the natives, and now that the Boers had triumphed over the English (for this much she had gathered from her captors and from Jantje), it was very doubtful if they would dare to help her. Besides, at the best, it would take twenty-four hours to collect a force, and that would be too late. The thing was hopeless. Nowhere could she see a ray of light.

"What," she said aloud to herself, "what is there in the world that will stop a man like Frank Muller?"

And then all of an instant the answer rose up in her brain as though through an inspiration:

"Death!"

Death, and death alone, would stop him. For a minute she kept the idea in her mind till she was familiarized with it, and then it was driven out by another that followed swiftly on its track. Frank Muller must die, and die before the morning light. By no other possible means could the Gordian knot be cut and both Bessie and her old uncle saved. If he were dead he could not marry Bessie, and if he died with the warrant unsigned their uncle could not be executed. That was the answer to the riddle, and a terrible one it was.

SCOTT ACT DISCUSSED.

A MEETING REGARDING THE ACT IN PETERBOROUGH COUNTY.

The Chief Officer, the Inspectors and Scott Act Association Meet—A Long Discussion and a Resolution.

A consultation was held on Tuesday afternoon in the Young Men's Christian Association rooms, at which Mr. Manning, Chief Officer of the License Department, Toronto, the License Inspectors of the County and temperance workers were present. The subject discussed was Scott Act enforcement.

Mr. MANNING, who presided, said it was scarcely possible for a Government official to perform his duty without complaint arising. He was not here to hold an investigation, as had been erroneously reported. It had been frequently found that discontent arose through an erroneous idea people might have of the Inspector's duty, or through the Inspector having erroneous ideas of his duty. By meeting together such errors were corrected. He asked them to state any complaints or ask any questions.

Dr. FIFE said that to some extent he was a complainant, though he had not laid a formal charge. Broadly stated, their complaint was that the Scott Act was not enforced as it should be.

Mr. G. E. WILLIAMS asked if it was the Inspector's duty to lay a charge for a third offence?

Mr. MANNING replied that the law gave the Inspector the option. There were times when it was better to follow on with a second offence. The Inspector was not compelled to lay charges for a third offence, but as a matter of policy he should avoid repeating firsts.

Mr. H. ROSSITER asked if it was right for Inspectors or police to only take cognizance of previous convictions when they had laid the charges?

Mr. MANNING answered that there was no compulsion to make an information for a second offence. If he was an Inspector he thought he would only take those in which he had laid the charge.

Mr. A. T. EMMERSON asked, if an Inspector secured two convictions, was it wise to lay a third charge for a first offence?

Mr. MANNING said he would make it for a second and make it more expensive.

Dr. FIFE said they wished the traffic stopped, either by fines or imprisonment. He preferred the milder form. But fines were inadequate when the fines came at long intervals.

Mr. MANNING—Is there not an improvement lately?

Dr. FIFE said a number had been fined lately, but they wanted the law pressed to prohibit.

Mr. MANNING said they could not have prohibition while liquor was brought in

Dr. FIFE said prosecutions were not as frequent as they might have been.

Mr. MANNING said the Inspector might make a note of it.

The Rev. F. H. WALLACE—Is it the settled policy to make all second offences, instead of third offences?

Mr. MANNING replied that he had already stated it to be in the Inspector's province to decide. It had been found difficult to secure third convictions.

Mr. WALLACE said that it was felt that unless third charges were pressed they would not be successful.

Mr. MANNING said that the Magistrate was not confined to $50 and $100 for first and second convictions.

Dr. FIFE—When a man is charged with a first offence, though previously convicted, could the Magistrate make it a second offence?

Mr. MANNING—No, but he could change a second to a first.

Mr. ROSSITER asked if the Inspector could not be in town on holidays?

Mr. MANNING said that other parts of the county needed attention. He asked if they could not give information to the Inspector?

Mr. ROSSITER said that information given on June 20th, was not acted on for from four to six weeks, and four holidays were thus included in one charge.

Mr. COCHRANE said that at the time he was working in the County.

Mr. D. B. GARDNER said that it was felt that they had a revenue producing law, and that in that case they might better go back to the license law. They wanted the law enforced, and men imprisoned when they persistently violated it.

Mr. JAMES STRATTON said that by licensing the traffic they became participators in the wrong. He would prefer the Scott Act, even if it were not enforced as they would like.

Rev. W. BENNETT said that in other places third convictions had been secured

Mr. A. CLEGG explained difficulties which had been met.

The Rev. I. TOVELL—I would like to ask when it would hold to lay a charge for a third offence.

Mr. COCHRANE—That has been answered already.

Mr. CLEGG—No. The question is, when, in the Inspector's discretion, does he think it right to lay charges for third offences?

The Rev. Mr. WALLACE (after a pause) said he would be glad to have an answer. The Inspector had promised to lay such charges.

Mr. COCHRANE said he had promised, but had been advised not to.

Mr. WALLACE—Would you tell us who advised you? We want to know who is responsible.

Mr. COCHRANE said he was not compelled to tell. There was hard swearing now at the Court, and if they enforced penalties for third offences it would be worse.

Mr. CLEGG asked if the Department would instruct the Inspector to lay charges for third offences?

Mr. MANNING said he could not answer for the Department. If the Inspector asked his opinion, he would say, in response to the feeling here, to try it.

Mr. J. STRATTON asked if the Inspector lost a case, did he have to pay the costs?

Mr. COCHRANE—Not personally.

Mr. STRATTON—Then let the third offences be pressed.

Mr. EMMERSON said that since it had been decided that an hotel keeper was a compellable witness there was not so much complaint of false swearing.

In reply to further discussion, Mr. Manning explained the proceedure and powers connected with a search warrant. He also reminded the meeting that the Inspector was not paid for all his time.

Mr. CLEGG said that one point was that information given on June 20th was held till July 13th, and the charges made to include the time up to the latter date.

Mr. COCHRANE said that in including the extra time he might have done wrong, but he would remember the point in the future.

Mr. J. R. STRATTON said the meeting overlooked the way informations were laid in other places. There had been a large number of circulars issued for this meeting but the small attendance showed that there was not the same unanimity as at first. In Lindsay they only imposed $50 fines. If Peterborough was the only place in which it was enforced the Inspector would not have the sympathy of the people with him in enforcing imprisonment.

The Rev. Mr. WALLACE said he was rather surprised at these remarks. There was a growing feeling that no one was in earnest in enforcing the law, from the Dominion and Provincial Governments down to the Inspectors. They were hoping that the Provincial Government would enforce the law fully. He had a right to say that, as he had voted for their candidate. If other places did wrong, it was no reason why they should do wrong. Mr. Mowat promised to meet the views of the temperance people. When their views were reported to the Inspector he promised to act on them, but he was advised. People thought there was politics in it. He thought the Government should advise. He moved a resolution embodying his views.

Mr. MANNING said that the Ontario Government was the only one that had took up the enforcement of the law, and had done so in opposition to the wishes of some of their supporters. They had gone as far as the sentiment of the community supported them, and it seemed hard to blame them. He was here as a Government officer to hear complaints and answer questions, and was not presiding at a public meeting, therefore he could not put the motion.

Mr. WALLACE said he saw the difference, and withdrew his motion. It should be understood, though, that that was the feeling of the meeting.

Mr. J. STRATTON said that there was much less liquor drank since the Scott Act came in force.

Mr. COCHRANE explained some work he had done in the county, and said he only got $400 for it he did.

Mr. YELLAND asked if the salary could not be increased and the money taken from the fines or raised some way.

Mr. MANNING said the Dominion Government had taken the fines from them, otherwise they would probably have been so used. It was apparently done to injure the Act. Why should they not elect men to the Councils who would stand by the Act?

Mr. YELLAND—And to Parliament. He would do his best against any Government that did not support the temperance cause, though he had always been a Grit. Until they broke away from politics for this one principle they would not gain their point, and that they would do.

Mr. WALLACE said he saw Mr. Cochrane's difficulty of a small salary. That threw the responsibility back on the Parliament and Government.

Mr. J. R. STRATTON said he did not think that the meeting could complain of the action of the Goverament throughout the Province. They had shown a readiness to meet the views of themperance men. Mr. Wallace had taken him up short. He appreciated Mr. Wallace's vote and believed he had done nothing to lose his support. He would vote to increase Mr. Cochrane's salary to $1,000 if a bill was brought in by the Government for that purpose.

Mr. MANNING said that the better position for them to take was to show the Government that they were pleased with what they had done, and say they would like more done. A fair way to judge of an Inspector was to compare him with other Inspectors. He was inclined to think that the meeting had done good; that some had found it was not so easy to enforce the law as they thought, and that the Inspector had come to the conclusion that those present were in earnest. He hoped an effort would be made to enforce the law that would give satisfaction. In reply to a question he said the Government authorized an Inspector to employ detectives and to give $5 for an information leading to a conviction.

Mr. J. R. STRATTON, in reply to the Rev. J. C. Wilson, said that the brewers' license given by the Dominion Government was subject to the limitations of the Scott Act

Mr. EMMERSON asked if an additional Inspector could not be appointed for the town.?

Mr. MANNING said he thought the Government would not feel justified in incurring the expense.

Mr. J. R. STRATTON proposed a resolution expressing sympathy with the Inspectors, expressing a hope that the law would be vigorously enforced and asking that the Inspector's salary be increased.

Dr. FIFE did not see how this resolution could be passed, when Mr. Wallace's was declined.

Mr. COCHRANE said he was glad the Association had found one perfect man. His friend Mr. Darling (Inspector for the East Riding) had sat there and let him bear all the brunt.

Mr. Manning then left the chair, and Dr. Fife was called to the position.

On motion of Mr. CLEGG, seconded by the Rev. I. TOVELL, a resolution of thanks to Mr. Manning for his courtesy in conducting the meeting was passed.

The East Riding was then reviewed for a short time. Reports were repeated that liquor was being sold in various places.

Mr. DARLING said that some fines had been imposed, and he had received no complaints since.

After a little further discussion the matter dropped.

The REV. MR. WALLACE said that he and Mr. J. R. Stratton had amalgamated their resolutions. He moved, seconded by Mr. J. G. WRIGHT,—That this meeting desire to express their sympathy with the Inspectors in their endeavors to enforce the Canada Temperance Act, but that, whereas, although the Canada Temperance Act is in force in the County of Peterborough, we regret to notice that intoxicating liquor is still very freely sold and a considerable amount of drunkenness still exists, and whereas considerable intervals have elapsed during which the Inspectors have laid no informations; that considerable intervals have at different times elapsed between the furnishing of information to the Inspectors and the laying of informations by the Inspectors; that in our opinion cases that ought to have been made third offences have been made second offences; this meeting, representing the Scott Act Association and temperance people of the County, respectfully but strongly urge upon the Ontario Government the advisability of securing on the part of their officers more prompt and efficient discharge of their duty; that to this end the Secretary of the Scott Act Association communicate with the Government representing to them the desirability of increasing the salaries of Inspectors in order to enable them to devote their whole time to the enforcement of the Act.

The resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. J. R. STRATTON—Is it understood that the decision of the meeting is that the Inspector should prosecute oftener for second offences?

Mr. YELLAND said Mr. Manning told them they had nothing to do with it.

Mr. MANNING said he understood that the decision was to try third offences.

The meeting then adjourned.

A Word for Montreal.

A letter was received from Col. Jackson, of Montreal, this morning. He says that Peterborough was never so much talked of there before. Whenever the Oddfellows meet they discuss the Peterborough demonstration. It is something surprising that all of the Mounted officers have been writing for quiet horses. On being taken to task about this Col. Jackson defends himself and brother officers by saying that he doesn't want to climb a telegraph poll or go through a pane of plate glass, that is all. It might spoil the procession. He encloses a chromo showing what canton officers can do in the horsemanship line and desires that it be framed and presented to the General He facetiously concludes:—"Kindly order fine weather, light wind N. W. by N, N. W.; sky slightly overcast; a slight rainfall on Tuesday night." Send your order early to Wiggins.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

FISHERY AFFAIRS.

Capt. Scott Replies to Questions from a United States Admiral.

HALIFAX, Aug. 3.—Capt. P. A. Scott has received from the United States Admiral Luce, now here, on the flagship Richmond, a series of six questions on points in connection with the present condition of the fishery affairs. The questions, which were submitted in writing, have been answered in the same manner, the whole being signed by Capt. Scott, as commander of the Canadian fishery protection service. The following are the questions and replies:—

1. Are there any Canadian ports where American vessels engaged in fishing may replenish their stock of provisions, and if so name them? Answer—Not any, but in the autumn, when American fishermen are out of provisions and leaving for home, they are permitted to take such as they may require for that purpose only.

2. Will it be insisted upon that every American fisherman anchoring in port or other places on the coast for shelter only, must enter and clear at the Custom House? Answer—At all times when practicable to do so; but if at an inconvenient distance from the Custom House and a cruiser is present her captain will enter and clear those that apply.

3. What construction is placed by the Canadian officials on the word "repairs," as expressed in the treaty of 1818, that is, may a fisherman who needs repairs to his rigging enter port to buy rope? Does the word "repairs" include everything on board such vessels as are necessary to a complete fishing vessel? Answer—This must be left to the discretion of the Collector of Customs or the captain of a cruiser, as it is liable to great abuse.

4. Are Canadian officials instructed to restrict Americans to certain ports in the Bay of Chaleur and Gaspe Bay for wood, water and repairs; if so, what ports are they? Answer. The Bay of Chaleur is closed to American fishermen with the exception of Port Daniel and Nuscca harbours, which are open to them for the purpose of obtaining wood, water, shelter and repairs, but when medical aid is required they may go to Paspebiac for that purpose only. Gaspe is not closed, but the Americans only enter for either of the four things mentioned in the treaty.

5. The Magdalen Island is being excepted by treaty stipulations from the restrictions applied to other ports of the coasts, is it to be understood that American fishermen may at those islands ship fish in bond to the United States, ship men and purchase provisions there?

Answer—Under the convention American fishermen can only take, cure and dry fish at the Magdalens under the restriction specified in the treaty; therefore they cannot ship fish in bond, ship men nor purchase supplies.

6. Are the Dominion cruisers authorized to enter and clear vessels in the same manner as collector of Customs is present. (See the answer to No. 2.)

The information returned by Capt. Scott is, on the whole, it is understood, not satisfactory to Admiral Luce.

Fatal Accident at Sherbrooke.

SHERBROOKE, Aug. 3.—Yesterday afternoon, about 4, a lad named Georgie Campbell, aged 12 years, was crushed to death by the large gearing in the Sherbrooke Iron Works. He was playing with another lad, and is supposed to have been caught by some belting and thrown upon the wheel. His mother is a widow, and he was an only child, and was the grandson of the Mr. Campbell who was one of the victims at the burning of the hotel in New Westminster, B.C., last winter.

To be Fought Out to the End.

OTTAWA, Aug. 3.—The bitter contest between Gilmour & Co. and Father Paradis promises to be fought out to the bitter end. The Gilmours are very indignant over their arrest. Father Paradis told a reporter today that Premier Mercier had promised to support him, as he thought the lumber companies, when they got a chance, oppressed settlers. Father Paradis says he is acting on behalf of settlers, whose right to the logs in Egan township the Gilmours would not recognize.

ROUND-TABLE CONFERENCE.

Result of the Meetings—Scheme of Home Rule Outlined.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The Pall Mall Gazette publishes to-day a long article giving the practical result of the round-table conference, hitherto kept quite secret in spite of all the wrangles over it. The following is a summary of this. It outlines the coming scheme for Home Rule with an accuracy almost amounting to certainty.

First—The concession to Ireland of one national legislature, with an executive which will represent the whole island, and will have its seat in the capital.

Second—This is safeguarded as follows: (A) That the Imperial Parliament continue to represent the whole and not part only of the United Kingdom. This means the retention of the Irish members at Westminster. (B) That the powers given to any new local Parliament be delegated and not surrendered. (C) That the subjects to be treated by the local authorities be clearly defined, and shall be subject to revision and control; that is by turning out the English Ministry which refuses to veto an Irish bill in opposition to the majority of the House. (D) That the administration of justic shall remain with the authority responsible to the Imperial Parliament. This was the knottiest point. The present judge is to be retained for life, while the Crown will appoint new ones for fifteen years. The constabulary at first will continue in the hands of the Crown.

Third—The finance principle laid down is that the fiscal unity of the three kingdoms, so far as relates to Customs excise, shall be maintained unimpaired. Customs excise will remain in the hands of the Imperial Government. Imperial officers will collect and transmit to the Imperial Exchequer whatever sums are payaole in Ireland under these heads. The fact that Irish representation will be maintained unimpared in the Imperial Parliament immensely simplifies the financial bargain, instead of fixing the tribute to be paid in Ireland of a fixed proportion to the Imperial expenditure, which will not vary in times of war or peace. It is not believed that the proportion of the Irish will be fixed at a lower fraction than that of one-fifteenth, so that it will be possible for Ireland to contribute equally with other parts of the United Kingdom so far as it is necessary for the maintenance of Imperial interest at home and abroad.

Fourth—The land question will be no gigantic purchase scheme. Legislation will be carried out on the lines indicated by the Royal Commission, leaving to the Irish Legislature to devise such a scheme of land purchase as shall seem to it necessary, it being clearly understood that the assent of the Imperial Parliament must be obtained to any scheme for the expropriation of the landlords and no such expropriation will be possible without. An Imperial guarantee will be given only to a scheme which is both financially sound as regards the state and just with reference to individuals.

The above is practically the scheme which Sir George Otto Trevelyan has declared has been arrived at. It has been seen and practically approved of by Mr. Morley, Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Parnell, Sir George Otto Trevelyan, Mr. Labouchere, and, it is believed, by Mr. Gladstone himself. Its importance may be gathered from the fact that the greatest pressure has been brought to bear upon the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, to induce him to suppress it, one of the most distinguished of the politicians just mentioned having declared to the editor that if he published the above he would never speak to him on politics again. The editor has postponed it now for several months, but in view of the rapidity of recent events refuses to do so longer.

DYNAMITE.

An Attempt to Destroy a British Steamer at New York.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—An Irishman, whose name the police have not yet disclosed, tried to blow up the British steamer Queen, of the National Line, this afternoon. He rowed up in a small boat alongside the Queen and threw a bottle containing some kind of explosive on board. An explosion followed which set fire to the steamer. The flames, however, were soon extinguished. The police went in pursuit of the fellow in the row boat. He had put out for the Jersey shore but they captured him and brought him to police headquarters. He said he was one of a band of men who had effected an organization having for its object the destruction with explosives of every vessel carrying the British flag.

The broken bottle was taken to Police Headquarters. It contained kerosene, neptha and rags soaked in chemicals. The prisoner took it coolly. "I was thwarted in this," he said, "but there are plenty of others at work who will avenge the insult to American vessels and burn every vessel carrying the British flag." The prisoner gave the name of Conrad J. Mooney and said he lived at No. 267 Warren Street, Brooklyn. He was remanded until morning. Mooney told the police he formed one of a gang of men who had determined to burn ever vessel entering the port carrying the British flag. The seizure of American vessels in Canada and the usurpation of all commerce by the English had induced him to join the band. A long doubled-edged knife was found in the man's pocket. The steamer was only slightly damaged.

Killed by Lightning.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 2.—Lightning struck the foremast of the schooner Neptune, of St. John, N.B., about a mile off the bar, at the mouth of the Connecticut River, on Sunday night, and completely shattered the stick. A seaman, John Carney, aged 32, of Prince Edward Island, who was standing near the mast, was instantly killed. The vessel put into Greeport for repairs.

OLD ORCHARD ROMANCE.

Pathetic Story of a Child Wife—Only Marie and Robbie Left.

Among the habitues of the beach who have returned is Mrs. R. M. Thompson, of New York. Mrs. Thompson has always been one of the social leaders here, and she has always made things very bright and lively. This year, however, she is dressed in deep black, and she is hardly ever seen out, except attended by a nurse girl with a baby carriage, luxuriously appointed, in which is a lovely baby, one of the daintiest bits of humanity that can be imagined. It is Mrs. Thompson's little orphaned grandchild, the child of her eldest son and his wife, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Senator Murphy, of New York. The story of this baby's parents is full of romance and pathos, and it is well worth the telling. Last summer Mr. Thompson was called suddenly home by the illness of his son in Paris, and although a few days later more hopeful news came over the cable, yet it was not long before Mrs. Thompson's husband came home, bringing with him the body of his son and the bereaved young wife, who soon after followed, leaving this bit of a baby and one little daughter as a legacy to the broken-hearted parents. The affection of this couple had been life-long. As tiny children they had played together; a little later they were partners at dancing school and at children's parties. He was a manly little fellow, and she was a lovely child. When they were ten years old he led his little sweetheart in to his mother and gravely announced that they were engaged, and that Amelia's mother had given her consent. The parents treated it is a huge joke, but the little pair were quite in earnest, and when at nineteen he was through college he married his playmate, who was then sixteen. Taking the foreign business of his father's house, he and his bride went to live in Paris. They were literally children, a perfect pair of babies in the world, and everybody who knew them in the gay French capital wondered at their youth and beauty and admired their devotion. A little girl came to them by and by, and those who used to see this youthful mother with her baby said it was like a child playing with a doll, she was so girlish herself. Last summer this young husband received an injury which resulted in his death. The little wife was heart-broken, and came home to her father's house to give birth to this baby and then die. Every effort was made to save her, but she simply did not want to live. Her whole desire was to go to her husband. Her father begged her to live for his sake, but she only said:—"No; I love you, papa, but I want Robert, and I cannot stay away from him." Day by day she grew weaker, and, although there was no trace of disease about her, they saw that she was simply letting go on life and slipping away from them. There was no pain, no suffering; it was just a fading away. One day the doctor said to the stricken father:—"It is only a question of hours." She heard him, although it was not intended that she should, and when the physician went away she turned to her father, her face radiant with happiness. "Papa, 'she said, "I want you to have Marie (her little daughter), and she will take my place to you; and mamma Thompson, I want you to have Robbie, for he will take the place of the Robbie you gave me. You will not miss us so much because you have our little children. I would like to have stayed with you myself if I could, but I can't stay away from my husband; he wants me more than you do." That was her good-bye, and a little later she passed peacefully away, happy in the firm faith that she was going to Robert. The baby, born in the midst of all this sorrow, is as joyous and happy as possible. It seems to be a veritable bit of sunshine sent into the gloom of the hearts that received him. Is it strange that, with this romantic story back of him, this baby should be the centre of attraction, and that every one who comes in contact with him should feel constrained to give him a bit of genuine love for the sake of those who have gone and left him here? His grandmother is devoted to him and is his most ardent lover and willing slave. Nobody but herself is allowed to bathe or dress him, and when awake he is always with her. She says he is dearer to her than any other child has ever been, for she has to love him for herself and his mother too. —Boston Herald.

THE BOULANGER-FERRY AFFAIR.

Amusement Caused in Paris by the Attempts to Arrange a Duel.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The attempts of Gen. Boulanger's seconds to arrange a duel between their principal and M. Jules Ferry have assumed a phase affording much amusement to disinterested parties. The bickerings of the representatives of the ex-Minister have gone far to confirm the opinion formed by many that the affair would ultimately end in a fizzle, and the tactics employed appear to have been borrowed for the occasion from the devotees of the present day prize ring. Sympathy, however, is largely with Gen. Boulanger, and the suspicion is rapidly gaining ground that M. Ferry will not fight unless he can be assured that the chances of his getting hurt will be reduced to a remote possibility. In fact, men who have given the matter any thought, and there is scarcely one who has not, find it difficult to eliminate from the things to be considered the suggestion of cowardice accompanying the action of a man who goes out of his way to insult another, and when satisfaction is demanded of him on the field of honor, insists upon limiting the liability of danger to himself to a single exchange of shots at 25 paces. Count Dillon is said to have remarked to a friend after his withdrawal from the conference of seconds that a duel between the ex-Premier and the ex-Minister of War was yet possible, but if it should be fought according to the methods of safety insisted upon by M. Ferry, it could not possibly be otherwise than a harmless affair.

A Peculiar Accident.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Yesterday afternoon a 5-year-old daughter of Mr. S. Draper met with a terrible accident. She was walking along the top of a fence and had the end of a stick in her mouth, when she fell off and on the stick. It was forced through her throat and out at the side of her neck.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

TREVELYAN'S VICTORY.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Sir George Otta Trevelyan's victory is felt in Conservative circles to be the severest blow the Unionist cause has yet experienced. Intense interest pervaded the clubs last evening. Each sid attached supreme importance to the election as the first fought fight since the general election between a Gladstonian and a Liberal-Unionist, the other contests having been between Conservatives and Gladstonians. Sir George Otta Trevelyan, in a speech last evening, said that his victory made it next to impossible for the Government to proclaim the Irish National League. The election, he declared, largely settled the Irish question. Henceforth Ireland must be treated in a spirit of conciliation, kindness and confidence.

STATE DIRECTED COLONIZATION.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The sub-committee on state directed colonization will recommend to the full committee the formation of a colonization board with imperial and colonial members; that the capital be raised by public subscription with interest at 3 per cent., guaranteed by the Government for thirty years; that colonists who receive advances shall pay 4 per cent. after the first year, the security given being a rent charge, and that the colony be expected to give free land, the rent charge to be redeemed by the colonists within thirty years.

PRINCE FERDINAND'S ACTION.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The report that Prince Ferdinand has taken his departure for Bulgaria to assume the rulership of that country is very much doubted here, and the comparatively few persons that give it credence are inclined to believe that his stay will be short. Russia and France are not disposed to recede from their position of assuming that his election was illegal, and Turkey, without whose consent the young Prince's rule cannot begin, will act precisely as Russia indicates.

THE PROPOSED COUP D'ETAT.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—M. de Lafosse, who was accused of having proposed a coup d'etat to General Boulanger, has published an account of his relations with the General. He says he often had occasion to visit General Boulanger on official business at the War Office. The General was always affable. M. de Lafosse congratulated him upon his raising the moral tone of the nation after fifteen years of depression. General Boulanger replied that a hundred generals had urged him towards war, but he had been compelled to dampen their ardor. M. de Lafosse told General Boulanger that he was winning all the popularity that Parliament was losing, and that if he played his cards well he might rise very high.

DISPERSED BY A MAD DOG.

LONDON, August 2.—A socialistic meeting at Lambeth on Sunday was brought to a sudden termination, and the assemblage dispersed by the advent of a mad dog. Two girls were severely bitten, and several men and women were injured by falling and being trampled upon by others in their haste to get away.

IRISH NATIONAL LEAGUE.

DUBLIN, Aug. 3.—The first meeting of the National League since the Coercion act was put in operation was held here yesterday. It was announced that the receipts from America since the last meeting amounted to £5,200. The Lord Mayor declared that the League, if proclaimed, would continue its fight.

THE BALTIMORE AND OHIO.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—It is stated that the object of Mr. Robert Garrett's visit to London is to make a great loan to cover all the obligations of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway company. The road is to be extended to New York.

BERNE, Aug. 3.—A bookseller, named Korben, of this city, and his assistant were killed recently while making an ascent on the Oberland with a guide.

FOREST FIRES IN GREECE.

ATHENS, Aug. 3.—There have recently been numerous incendiary forest fires in the vicinity of Athens, Megara and Corinth. Immense damage has been done.

DEATH OF A CRIMEAN HERO.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Philippe Xavier Pelissier, the distinguished French General and Senator, is dead. He was 75 years old.

THE IRISH LAND BILL.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—In the House of Commons, last night, clause 21 of the land bill, the consideration of which had been postponed, was omitted. The remaining original clauses were disposed of. Mr. Balfour submitted the first of the Government's new clauses, which empowers the court to rescind leases obtained since 1869 by undue influence. This clause and several minor clauses were agreed to and progress was reported on the understanding that the committee stage will be finished to-morrow.

THE CHESS TOURNAMENT.

FRANKFORT, Aug. 3.—The international chess tournament has been concluded. Capt. Mackenzie, of New York, won the first prize, Blackburn and Weiss divided the second and third prizes, and Bardeleben took the fourth prize.

PASSED THROUGH COMMITTEE.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The Land Bill passed through the committee stage in the House of Commons this afternoon.

THE PROPOSED CHANNEL TUNNEL.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The bill to allow the construction of a tunnel under the English Channel, which was introduced in the House of Commons by Sir Edward Watkins, was rejected this afternoon by 153 to 107.

COBOURG.

BURGLARY.—Of late there have been several burglaries committed at the residences of farmers in this vicinity. Early on Monday morning the residence of Mr. John Staples, near Baltimore, was entered and two watches stolen, one of which was gold, the property of Mr. Staples, the other was silver belonging to his son. The thief made sufficient noise to awaken Mrs. Staples, who saw the scoundrel at the window, and thinks she could identify him. An entrance was effected through an open window in the kitchen and the burglar must have had a confederate, as the tracks of a buggy were observed and also the footprints of a man who evidently wore stockings, were visible in the sand on the road.—Sentinel-Star.

The Daily Review

THURSDAY, AUGUST 4, 1887.

SOUTH RENFREW.

THERE have been five bye-elections held since the general elections for the Dominion House of Commons last February, In each of these constituencies the Conservative candidate has been elected. Mr. Cargill, of East Bruce, and Mr. Hudspeth, of South Victoria, through oversight in not resigning offices held by them, resigned and were re-elected. Through the death of the member for Restigouche, N. B., that constituency was opened, and Mr. Moffatt, Conservative, was elected by acclamation. Digby, N. S., was opened in the same way, and it also returned a Conservative, Mr. Jones, to the House. Four bye-elections, all resulting in favor of the Government was something the Opposition had no reason to feel elated over, yet they left the parties numerically in the same position as they were after the general election.

The victory on Tuesday in South Renfrew, however, has been a more signal one for the Conservative party. It is a seat that was long held by Reformers and elected a Reformer in February, but on Tuesday it gave a good majority to Mr. Ferguson, the Conservative candidate. This result does not indicate that Mr. Laurier will be a more successful leader of the Reform party than was Mr. Blake. The latter gentleman retired discouraged, yet a constituency which elected a member to support the party under his leadership has now reversed its decision and elected a supporter of the Government.

The electors of South Renfrew were not without good reasons for the change they made. The selection of Mr. Duncan McIntyre as the party candidate was of itself enough to show the insincerity of the party. Mr. McIntyre's connection with the Canadian Pacific would not injure his usefulness as a representative; but the fact that the men who had denounced the Canadian Pacific Company and attacked the principal members of it, and had attacked the Government on account of its friendly attitude towards that undertaking, had selected a member of the company and one of its principal promoters as their standard bearer, shows that they must have been insincere, or that they were willing to barter their principles for a party advantage. Being insincere in that particular, what reason was there to believe that they were not trifling with the people in their other statements? Such a question would naturally occur to the electors of South Renfrew and might be considered with profit by every one who has given credence to the assertions of Reform speakers and newspapers. The fact that the party organs were so vigorously advocating Commercial Union and striving to unsettle Confederation was doubtless not without influence, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that a number of the electors revolted against the policy of continually belittling our own country.

THE New York Tribune bitterly complains that "American rights are virtually renounced, and a policy of hostility and intimation is silently acquiesced in." The Tribune is opposed to the administration of President Cleveland. The Toronto Globe bemoans that "it seems to be the settled purpose of the Salisbury Government and of the Macdonald Government to sacrifice our fisheries." The Globe is opposed to the Macdonald Government. Both statements cannot be true, and the discerning reader will reject each of them, United States rights are not being invaded, and our fisheries are being protected.

THE system of parliamentary government has proved in this country a terrible failure.—London Advertiser.

If the Advertiser believes that the opinions of the majority of the people should not prevail, and that a minority should rule, then it must be admitted that, from its point of view, parliamentary government has been a failure. But so long as our system results, as it has, in the wishes of the majority being carried out, it will remain.

THAT Mr. McIntyre will be elected is no longer a matter of doubt.—Montreal Herald, Aug. 2nd.

The latest reports indicate that Mr. McIntyre had considerable doubt about the matter. In fact, a few hours after publishing that statement the Herald itself must have been less hopeful.

THE result of the election in South Renfrew has one sad feature connected with it. The Hon. Peter Mitchell's hopes of being chosen leader of the Reform party are no brighter than they were.

BUSINESS OF BEGGARY.

Confessions of One Who Knew All About It—Several Examples.

"A year ago I kept a boarding house on Carver street, which was the general headquarters for the crowd. At no time were there less than a dozen men and women who earned their living solely 'working the street.' The average number of boarders was about twenty. They were mostly natives of Belgium, who spoke French freely and were frequently mistaken for French people. Some were Italians and a few Germans. Perhaps half a dozen Frenchmen might be found among them, but some way they did not seem to like the business, or else they were too proud to follow it up.

"I was master of the house and got so much money every week for board and lodging, besides the professional advantages. If they didn't pay up prompt they had to get out. It was a principle of the house not to do a losing business. Yes, I'll show you over the house.

"That bed over in the corner used to be occupied by an old fellow who worked Temple place on the blind musician racket. He looked like a wreck any way, and if it hadn't been for his red nose and easy way of finding his way around he would have made a big success. As it was he didn't do very bad. After four years' work in New York, Philadelphia and Boston he carried away $1,000 back to Belgium. He has a son who expects to start next summer with as much more.

"In the next room lodged a fellow by the name of La Fitte, who was over six feet high and strong enough to knock out an ox. He played the broken arm racket one whole winter, and used to average from $6 to $10 a day."

"How much did your boarders make?" inquired the reporter.

"It all depended upon their professional ability," was the reply. "Some used to make as high as $10 a day on the average. Why, there was one feller with both legs cut off who used to room here, who got $5 a week from a woman on Beacon street one whole season. He was walking up Charles street one day, and near the Beacon street crossing tried his old trick of getting nearly run over by a horse car. Two old ladies saw him as he waddled along, using his sticks to help the leather stumps which he uses for feet. The driver didn't see him until he seemed almost under the horses' feet. Then he put on the brakes. Those ladies were scared, it seemed like such a narrow escape. They needn't have been, because he was a stumper in long practice and knew just what risk he could afford to run. At just the right minute he got out of the way. Pretty soon the old ladies overtook him, and pitied his bad luck in being cut off that way. He told a good story about a sickly wife and hungry children.

"Those old ladies told him to call next day, and he came down to the house and bet the boys a bottle of wine that he would stick the old lady for a 'ten.' He went to see them per agreement, came back with a new crisp $10 bill and an order on a downtown lawyer, who was the old lady's attorney, for a weekly pension of $5. This caused much fun among the boys, and they helped Jacques spend the whole amount before morning. 'That gift made seven of the dirtiest beggars in Boston royally drunk."—Boston Globe.

The German Flag in Africa.

The German flag now floats over fourteen white stations, and a district twice as large as Prussia today admits the sovereignty of Emperor William; but the German pioneers have secured for their country still further advantages. In the recent treaty between Germany and England the immense region between Victoria Nyanza and Kilima-Njaro on the north, and Nyassa and the Rooma river on the south, and from the Indian ocean west to Tanganyika, is designated as the zone of German interests into which England agrees not to intrude. This vast domain joins the Congo independent state, and together they form a wide belt across the continent from sea to sea, in which hundreds of white men are now striving with all their might to find what benefits equatorial Africa may be made to confer upon the world.

These Germans have in view a broadly conceived and clearly defined plan, whose practicability it is their first purpose to test thoroughly. It is their belief that large plantations for the culture of cotton, tobacco, sugar, rice and other products may be developed on these uplands with the aid of native labor, and that when means of communication with the coast have been perfected a large amount of capital may find profitable employment. All their stations are scenes of agricultural activity and training schools for native workmen. About 600 acres are in crops, practical farmers and gardeners are experimenting with all the tropical and European grains, vegetables, fruits and nuts, the stables are filled with cattle, goats, asses and fowls and several hundreds of workmen, whose native systems of irrigation and many herds and fields show that they are not wholly lacking in skill and industry, are being trained in white methods of manual labor. Thus the German East African society is striving to open new fields for home enterprise, to instruct and elevate the natives, and it is not without hope that some portions of its domain may prove to be adapted to the needs of German colonists—New York Sun.

The Fashions in Dogs.

I have often wondered whence issue such mysterious mandates as: "Newfoundlands to be called in," "St. Bernards to be all the rage," so that one breed succeeds another in fashion's esteem, and, literally, "every dog has his day." Old style dogs disappear as completely as "the flowers that bloom in the spring." At present you are allowed a huge St. Bernard of the pure Swiss stock to stroll beside baby's cab, and to guard baby while white capped Marie flirts with the policeman in the park. You may be followed by a team—two there must be—of English pugs, harnessed in dark red leather studded with brass. For house protection the black and tan is fashionable, but he must be tiny as a rat and of the costliest breed.

For the house, too, gray poodles are just coming in; but the thing is the Japanese dog, which closely resembles an ape, with white and yellow clinging hair. He is simply sublime in his ugliness. Nowadays a fashionable woman might as well be out of the world as out of a dog, but his style of beauty must be carefully studied in selecting a collar. Much depends on this. In nothing does a parvenu so brand herself parvenu as in this particular, selecting, for instance, the costliest of jeweled gold collars for a Japanese dog whose style of severe simplicity demands only a ribbon. Poodles and other long haired dogs are now dyed to match the favorite costume of their mistress.—Cor. Pioneer Press.

Ices in Paris.

Paris confectioners have a fancy to serve ices in the shapes of the fruits with which they are flavored. Very careful freezing and dexterous coloring are required to make successful entremets of this kind. Peaches of ice are served in halves, the kernel being imitated with a preparation of coffee ice. Strawberry ices in the shape of large strawberries are served with artificial stalks and leaves. Asparagus ices also are made, the stalk being a piece of bone or ivory, and the eatable part a compound of lemon and pistachio ice.—Home Journal.

Death Rate Among Children.

The following facts are suggestive: Full one-third of the patients of the general practitioner are children. Of all children born about one in five dies within the first year, and one in three by the end of the fifth year. In New York about one-half die in five years. It is with little children as with extreme old age, they are very liable to be sick, and their sickness to prove fatal. Of those who die within the first year 40 per cent. die of digestive troubles, and about 19 per cent. die of respiratory affections. During this second year this order is reversed, about 39 per cent. dying of respiratory and only 9 per cent. of diseases of the bowels.—Philadelphia Times.

The London World is the authority for the statement that one great personage wears mes de nuit speckled with black when there is a death in the family.

Consumption Can be Cured

By proper, healthful exercise, and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, which contains the healing and strengthening virtues of these two valuable specifics in their fullest form. Dr. D. D. McDonald, Petitcodiac, N.B., says: "I have been prescribing Scott's Emulsion with good results. It is especially useful in persons with consumptive tendencies." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

An Order for Rifles.

TORONTO, Aug. 2.—The British War Office has notified Capt. Harston, of this city, to make for them a number of his converted Martini magazine rifles, the latest improved sample of which was sent to them last February. The conversion of the Martini to the Harston patent can be effected at a cost of $1.25, and as the English Government has on hand 500,000 new Martinis, the adoption of this patent could be easily effected. As a magazine gun has been decided upon, a great saving would be the result.

McGarigle Strikes a Snag.

MONTREAL, Aug. 2.—Last evening, one Jas. Baxter, a broker, caused to be issued a warrant for the arrest of McGarigle, the fugitive Chicago boodler, on a charge of conspiracy, and detectives have left for the West to serve the document. It appears that McGarigle when chief of police maliciously caused Baxter's picture to be placed in the rogues' gallery.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGAR

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc

But after all it was just that he should die, for had he not murdered and attempted murder? Surely if ever a man deserved a swift and awful doom it was Frank Muller.

And so this apparently helpless girl, crouched upon the ground a torn and bespattered fugitive in the miserable hiding hole of a Hottentot, arraigned the powerful leader of men before the tribunal of her conscience and without pity, if without wrath, passed upon him a sentence of extinction.

But who was to be the executioner? A dreadful thought flashed into her mind and made her heart stand still, but she dismissed it. She had not come to that yet. Her eyes wandered round the kraal and lit upon Jantje's assegais and sticks in the corner, and then she got another inspiration. Jantje should do the deed. John had told her one day—told her, when they were sitting together in "The Palatial" at Pretoria—the [illegible] of Jantje's awful [illegible] sacre of his relatives by Frank Muller twenty years before[illegible] of which, indeed, she already knew something. It would be most fitting that the fiend should be removed off the face of the earth by the survivor of those unfortunates. There would be a little poetic justice about that, and it is so rare in the world. But the question was, would he do it? The little man was a wonderful coward, that she knew, and had a great terror of Boers, and especially of Frank Muller.

"Jantje," she whispered, putting her head toward the bee hole.

"Yes, missie," answered a hoarse voice outside, and next second his monkey like face came creeping into the ring of light, followed by his even more monkey like form.

"Sit down there, Jantje. I am lonely here, and want to talk."

He obeyed her, with a grin. "What shall we talk about, missie? Shall I tell you a story of the time when the beasts used to speak like I used to do years and years ago?"

"No, Jantje. Tell me about that stick—that long stick with a knob on the top, and the nicks cut on it. Has it not something to do with Frank Muller?"

The Hottentot's face instantly grew evil. "Yah, yah, missie!" he said, reaching out a skinny claw and seizing the stick. "Look, that big notch, that is my father, Baas Frank shot him; and that next notch, that is my mother, Baas Frank shot her; and the next one, that is my uncle, an old, old man, Baas Frank shot him, too. And these small notches, they are where he has beaten me—yes, and other things, too. And now I will make more notches—one for the house that is burned, and one for the old Baas Croft, my own baas, whom he is going to shoot, and one for Missie Bessie." And without further ado he drew from his side a very large, white handled hunting knife, and began to cut them then and there upon the hard wood of the stick.

Jess knew this knife of old. It was Jantje's peculiar treasure, the chief joy of his narrow little heart. He had bought it from a Zulu for a heifer which her uncle had given him in lieu of a half year's wages. The Zulu had got it from a man who came down from beyond Delagoa bay. As a matter of fact it was a Samali knife, manufactured from soft native steel (which takes an edge like a razor), and with a handle cut from the tusk of a hippopotamus. For the rest, it was about a foot long, with three grooves running the length of the blade, and very heavy.

"Stop cutting notches, Jantje, and let me look at that knife."

He obeyed, and put it into her hand.

"That knife would kill a man, Jantje," she said.

"Yes, yes," he answered; "no doubt it has killed many men."

"It would kill Frank Muller, now, would it not?" she said, suddenly bending forward and fixing her dark eyes upon the little man's jaundiced orbs.

"Yah, yah," he said, starting back, "it would kill him dead. Ah! What a thing it would be to kill him," he added, with a fierce half sniggle, half laugh.

"He killed your father, Jantje."

"Yah, yah, he killed my father," said Jantje, his eyes beginning to roll with rage.

"He killed your mother."

"Yah, he killed my mother," he repeated after her with eager ferocity.

"And your uncle. He killed your uncle."

"And my uncle, too," he went on, shaking his fist and twitching his long toes as his voice rose to a sort of subdued scream. "But he will die in blood—the old Englishwoman, his mother, said it when the devil was in her, and the devils never lie. Look! I draw Baas Frank's circle in the dust with my toe, and listen, I say the words—I say the words," and he muttered something rapidly; "an old, old witch doctor taught me how to do it, and what to say. Once before I did it, and there was a stone in the way; now there is no stone; look, the ends meet. He will die in blood! He will die soon. I know how to read the circle," and he gnashed his teeth and sawed the air with his clinched fists.

"Yes, you are right, Jantje," she said, still holding him with her dark eyes. "He will die in blood, and he shall die to-night, and you will kill him, Jantje."

The Hottentot started, and turned pale under his yellow skin.

"How?" he said; "how?"

"Bend forward, Jantje, and I will tell you how;" and she whispered for some minutes into his ear.

"Yes! yes! yes!" he said, when she had done. "Oh, what a fine thing it is to be clever, like the white people! I will kill him to-night, and then I can cut out the notches, and the ghosts of my father and my mother and my uncle will stop howling round me in the night as they do now when I am asleep."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

VENGEANCE.

For three or four minutes more they whispered together, after which the Hottentot rose to go and find out how things were among the Boers below, and see when Frank Muller retired to his tent. As soon as he had marked him down he was to come back and report to Jess, and then the final steps were to be decided on.

When he was gone Jess gave a sigh of relief. This stirring up of Jantje to the boiling point of vengeance had been a dreadful thing to nerve herself to do; but now at any rate it was done, and the deed settled upon. But what the end of it would be none could say. She would practically be a murderess, and she felt sooner or later her guilt would find her out, and then she would have little mercy to hope for. Still she had no scruples, for after all Frank Muller's would be a well merited doom. But when all was said and done it was a dreadful thing to be forced to steep her hands in blood, even for Bessie's sake. If Muller were slain Bessie would marry John, provided John escaped from the Boers, and be happy: but what would become of her? Robbed of her love, and with this crime upon her mind, what could she do, even if she escaped—except die! It would be better to die and never see him again, for her sorrow and her shame were more than she could bear. And then she began to think of John till all her poor, bruised heart seemed to go out toward him. Bessie could never love him as she did, she felt sure of that, and yet Bessie was to have him by her all her life, and she—she was to go away. Well, it was the only thing to do. She would see this deed done and set her sister free, and then if she happened to escape she would go—go right away, where she would never be heard of again. Then at any rate, she would have behaved like an honorable woman. She sat up and put her hands to her face. It was burning hot, though she was wet through, and chilled to the bone with the raw damp of the night. A fierce fever of mind and body had taken hold of her, worn out as she was with emotion, hunger and protracted exposure. But her brain was clear enough; she never remembered its being so clear before. Every thought that came into her mind seemed to present itself with startling vividness, standing out by itself against a black background of nothingness, not softened and shaded down one into another as thoughts generally are. She seemed to see herself wandering away—alone, utterly alone, alone forever!—while in the far distance John stood holding Bessie by the hand and gazing after her regretfully. Well, she would write to him, since it must be so, and bid him one word of farewell. She could not go without it. She had a pencil, and in the breast of her dress was the Boer pass, the back of which, stained as it was with water, would serve the purpose of paper. She drew it out and, bending forward toward the light, placed it on her knees.

Saved from the Wreck.

If the delicate organization of woman gets out of order, prompt application of remedial agents is required to save it from total wreck, in all such cases, whether to assist nature in the discharge of her functions, or to repair damage caused by diseases of special organs, there is no remedy so mild, and yet so effective as Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," prepared at the World's Dispensary, at Buffalo, N. Y., and administered for many years to thousands of patients with the happiest results.

Two More Vessels Seized.

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—Information was received by the department of Fisheries today of the seizure of the American sloops Fanny and James Garfield, in the Quoddy River bound for Eastport, Me., with cargoes of herring, the vessels having neither entered nor cleared at a custom house. Pending the receipt of further particulars instructions were issued by the Department to release the vessels on the deposit of a small fine.

GENERAL.

The crops in the North-West are reported to be in magnificent condition.

Mr. Erastus Wiman will address the Board of Trade and merchants of Detroit on the subject of Commercial Union with Canada on Aug. 30th.

Twenty-five hundred joiners are on strike at Hamburg, and much indignation has been created by the action of the police in suppressing the Joiners' Union.

Headache, Billiousness, Dyspepsia and Indigestion relieved and at once by Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. Try it. Samples free.

Upon receiving the freedom of Dublin city yesterday, Hon. Patrick A. Collins, of Boston, Mass., promised that the Irish in America would never desert the cause of Ireland.

A petition largely signed by members of both sides of the Imperial House of Commons, in favour of subsidizing the new mail commercial route through Canada to the East, will shortly be presented to the Government.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It will do you good. Sold by all Druggists. 50.

The seconds of Gen. Boulanger and M. Ferry have had a long conference without coming to terms, as M. Ferry's seconds are not prepared to accept the sanguinary conditions proposed by the General's representatives.

Mr. Stuart Cumberland on Monday night delivered a lecture in London on "Nature's New Highway to Australia and the East." Sir Charles Tupper presided, and spoke warmly of the friendly feeling that existed between Canadians and Americans, notwithstanding little difficulties inseparable from great communities.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

DUTY ON COAL.

Coal has now been on the free list long enough to convince anyone that it was the very biggest kind of a blunder to suppose that the duty had anything to do with the price. Not only is it no cheaper than it was before the duty was removed, but all the circumstances considered, it is actually dearer. So long as the mines are monopolized, and the output controlled in the interest of their owners, so long will the necessities and paying power of the consumers be the only things which affect the price.—Toronto Labor Reformer.

GROSSLY INCONSISTENT.

There is no conceivable question on which the Globe has not changed its attitude within the last few years, excepting the supreme desirability of putting the Tories out and its own party in. That is the one public issue on which you always know just where to find it.—Toronto News (Indep.)

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Board of Education.

The adjourned meeting of the Board of Education will be held to-morrow evening.

Father Keilty's Picnic.

Father Keilty's picnic at Chemong Park, Bridgenorth, will take place on Thursday, Sept. 8th, prox.

A Change.

The meeting of ladies, called by the Oddfellows for 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, will be held in the Charlotte street rink, instead of the Council Chamber.

Typhoid Fever.

Mr. Harry Long's friends will learn with regret that he has been attacked by typhoid fever. He is at present in the Nicholls Hospital. It is to be hoped that he will recover soon.

Ladies' Meeting.

It has been decided to hold a meeting of the ladies who intend to assist in the Charlotte Street Skating Rink dining room during the Oddfellows' demonstration. The meeting will be held in the Rink on Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock. 1d29

Photography.

Campers at Stoney Lake who wish to secure Mr. Sproule's services should drop him a card at once, as he will be at the lake only a limited time. Campers should all get their summer homes photographed. 3d27

Victoria Rifles Band.

The citizens of Peterborough will seldom have the chance of hearing such a band as that of the Victoria Rifles, Montreal. There will doubtless be large numbers in attendance at the concerts to be given in the P. A. A. A. grounds on Tuesday and Wednesday evening.

The Gold Watch.

The contest for the watch in connection with Father Keilty's picnic is between two very popular young ladies, Miss McDonald, the organist, and Miss Hickson, of Ennismore. The watch is a genuine gold watch costing $50 and is on exhibition at Mr. McClelland's, George Street, Peterborough.

Acknowledgment.

The ladies of the Protestant Home thankfully acknowledge the following donations: Mr. Stephen Payne, vegetables; Mr. Porter, cheese; ladies of St. Andrew's Church and Baptist Church, cakes, bread, &c.; a friend $1 worth bread tickets; Mrs. E. Duff, berries; Mr. J. D. Tully, two boxes toilet soap; Mr. Quirk, tobacco, as usual; Mrs. B. Ferguson, black currants.

New Grand Trunk Bridge

The Campbellford Herald says.—"We learn that the railway bridge spanning the Trent river, in this village, which was built about eight years ago, and which has with few repairs done good service for the transportation of heavy laden and rapid moving trains, is to be removed at an early day, and the fine old stream is to be graced by a more modern structure of iron. With the completion of the structure, we believe the train service is to be increased to twenty or thirty trains a day. Through trains will be run from Belleville, and the line will become an excellent outlet for the escape of freight moving east and west, covering the distance between Toronto and Belleville."

An Arrest.

This forenoon a man named Laurance Hill appeared on George street bearing a heavy burden of moxie, or something else, and a mud turtle on his back. Some one had taken advantage of his state and had attached the mud turtle to him, and there it hung till he got on George street at the corner of Hunter. Here it fell to the ground, and Hill became infuriated at the idea of its having been on him. He picked up a stone and was making ready to smash the turtle when Mr. John McClelland interposed. His wrath turned against Mr. McClelland and he fired the stone at the shop. Fortunately it did not strike one of the plate glass windows, but the door instead. Acting Chief Adams was soon on hand and took Hill in charge, but did not get him to the cells without great difficulty.

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

Firemen's Excursion.

About three hundred and seventy-five people left town this morning on the Firemen's excursion. The band of the Fire Brigade were on board.

The Rate.

The taxes this year will be conserably lighter on the ratepayers than those imposed last year. Present appearances indicate that the rate will not be above 18 mills on the dollar.

Decorating.

The Decoration Committee in connection with the Oddfellows' Demonstration commenced work on Wednesday evening under the superintendence of Mr. Watson. The arches are being ornamented with emblems of the order.

Personal.

Mr. Phil. Foy, of Belleville, is in town. He come up here to get away from the Belleville weather. Since he left Peterborough he has built up a good trade in the ginger ale business in the Bay City.

Tall Corn.

The Rev. J. C. Wilson, of Ashburnham, throws the corn stalks of Messrs. Earl and Coulter into the shade altogether. When he read of Mr. Coulter's 9 foot stalk he went out into his garden and measured a stalk which stood just 10 feet three inches high.

The Heat.

A citizen stood in front of the REVIEW office on Wednesday afternoon. On being approached by a friend he returned the snubbing answer "don't speak to me." "Why?" "Because I'm slowly but surely melting away." The thermometer registered 97 in the shade to-day.

Cricket.

The Omemee and Peterborough junior cricketers played a match in the P. A. A. A. grounds on Wednesday afternoon. The visiting lads were badly worsted. At the end of the second innings Peterborough was 93 ahead. Among the large scorers for Peterborough were Hamilton, who made 36 in the first innings and 29 in the second; Kincaid, who put together 27 in the first innings; Hay, who scored 25, and Dumble and Ray, whose scores were 16 and 13 respectively. For the visitors, English made 21 and Shepherd 22.

Buildings.

As the season advances large building enterprises are cropping up all over the town. At the present time several large business blocks, and several extensive terraces are in progress, besides the extension of factories. It is probable that the Lindsay-Seldon Furniture Factory will move across the river to an extensive four stor building to be erected by the Dickson Company for them, their present factory to be used for other purposes. A large number of houses and private residences are springing up all over the town.

Lacrosse.

The Orillia correspondence of the Toronto Mail to-day says, in regard to the game of lacrosse played here on Monday:—"It was hardly by good play that the victory was won. The people of Peterborough who attended the match were treated to one of the worst exhibitions of slugging the Orillias have had during their experience as players, Stewart and Washburn of their team being so badly hurt that they will not be able to work for the next week. The Orillias Juniors played at a great disadvantage by three of their best players being absent, these accompanying the team to Ottawa." It may not have been by good play that the Riversides won the game, as it was only once in a while that either side showed good play. It can be certainly said that it was not by "slugging" that the game was won, as there was a happy absence of that. Once a boy on the Orillia side called "time" on account of his pants being torn a little. It was allowed him, and the game proceeded. Besides this, there was nothing of the "carrying off the field" character, and more than one commented on the fair way in which the game was played. The Orillia Juniors seem to be affected with the same complaint as the Seniors—they multiply their injuries and seem bent on letting all the world know of them. In regard to the challenge of playing for a silver cup, contained in the latter part of the paragraph, no doubt it will be accepted if addressed to the secretary of the club, not the Toronto Mail.

YOUNG'S POINT

From Our Own Correspondent.

A. C. A. CAMP.—Our enterprising merchant, W. J. Young, has opened out a supply store at Eagle Mount opposite Jean Island, which will be very convenient to those who are not members of the Canoe Association. The store is built on a large scow and the steamers can land passengers very handy, as it answers for a wharf. This store will be found very convenient for campers wishing to renew their supplies and opposition is the life of trade. The canoe races and all connected with the A. C. A. Camp can be seen at great advantage from Mr. Young's camp.

THE SAW MILL.—Our old friend Con Young is very busy in his mill cutting lumber and manufacturing shingles, which he ships to all points in Ontario—being considered first class.

THE STEAMER FERRY.—This fine little steamer is getting all she can do in the passenger line from Lakefield to the Camp, for the simple reason that from the Captain down, all are very obliging, and let you embark anywhere on the route.

THINGS IN GENERAL.—Farmers are very busy at present.—Crops will be a fair average.—Business is lively.—The saw-log drives make things look lively.—and the immense traffic up the lakes drives dull care away.

It is understood that the recent fishery seizures formed the principal subject of discussion at Monday's meeting of the Federal Cabinet at Dalhousie, N. B.

POLICE COURT.

FORESTALLING.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 3.—Joseph Martini, the peanut man, was fined $1 at the Court this morning for forestalling by buying apples on the market before 11 o'clock.

THE FIREMEN'S EXCURSION.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—I noticed in the EVENING REVIEW of yesterday a letter on the subject of the Firemen's excursion, which, to say the least of it, contains a very great injustice to the officials of the G. T. R. of Peterborough. It is quite evident that the person styling himself the 'Firemen's Friend" is either grossly ignorant of the plain facts of the case, or his intentions are of a malicious nature. From the information I have been able to gather it would seem that either the firemen themselves or the C. P. R. officials are to blame for the piece of bungling in advertising improper rates; the Grand Trunk Railway appears to have acted simply on the defensive and as a matter of principle.

As regards the officials here arranging the excursion, anyone in possession of ordinary reason must know that such could not be the case. They are men under authority and must do as they are instructed. As far as the business and private character of the officials are concerned, the G. T. R. may be congratulated on having men of such sterling worth and ability, and the community may feel proud of having such men amongst them. Personally I have always found them courteous and attentive on duty and gentlemanly in every way, and when I say this, I think I am but voicing the sentiments of the public generally.

Yours faithfully,
FAIR PLAY.

Peterborough, Aug. 2, 1887.

INFORMATION WANTED.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—I would like to know if the Oddfellows have given any patent right to any individuals to advertise their wares under the auspices of the society, as I notice in purchasing some tickets for their promenade concert, the stamp of a tailoring establishment plastered thereon. I was not aware before that they allowed anything of that kind in connection with their order—one which I have great respect for.

Yours &c.
CITIZEN.

Peterborough, Aug. 4, 1887

Natural Gas Near Quebec.

QUEBEC, August 3.—The natural gas at Louiseville has at last been reached in enormous quantities. It has been conveyed to the engine, which has hitherto pumped water so many hours a day for the use of the people of the town. It has now taken the place of the fuel formerly employed for the boiler of the engine, and the pumps are kept constantly going night and day. The company working this gas talks of conveying it in pipes to Montreal and Quebec, and utilizing it for illuminating, heating and motive purposes.

DIFFERENT CONTITIONS.

The conditions existing in the United States at the present time are altogether different from what they were in 1855. At the time of the existence of the old Reciprocity Treaty prices for nearly all goods, and more especially food products, in the States were ruling at abnormally high values. The civil war had the effect of taking large numbers of men from industrial and agricultural pursuits and placing them in the non producing class. In this way production was largely curtailed for a series of years, and added to the increased war demands, values were abnormally high all around. Now, however, there are no such incentives to render United States markets so desirable to our agriculturists. Since those days the Weastern States have made great strides in agricultural development, and with the great extension of the railway systems through those regions, and the consequent reduction in freight rates, the Western farmers, favored as they are with cheap lands and virgin soil, are enabled to pour their products in upon the East in a ceaseless and irresistable stream. Farming has been rendered unprofitable in the Eastern States in many branches owing to this Western competition. Under commercial union it is not unlikely that many Eastern Canadian agricultural industries would likewise be compelled to succumb.—Winnipeg Commercial.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

RUSSIA'S POLICY.

Objection to a Coference—Backing the Rebels in Afghanistan.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The effort which the Porte is now making to obtain a conference of the powers on the Bulgarian question is not likely to succeed. Russia will not take part in any such conference, neither will she comply with such a decision as a majority of the powers would be likely to arrive at. It is stated that Austria is now actively engaged in an attempt to bring order out of chaos, and is in constant communication with the Bulgarian Ministry in pursuit of that object. It is strongly suspected that Russia is backing the Ghilzais and other rebels against the authority of the Ameer of Aghanistan, although the Indian Government is not in possession of evidence sufficiently strong to warrant an official accusation against the Czar's Government of bad faith in carrying out the Afghan frontier agreement. The recent settlement of the boundary question at St. Petersburg is regarded as a farce, however, and everybody expects to see the whole matter re-opened before long. The Ameer is in bad shape physically. His soldiers are deserting him, the rebels are every day becoming more formidable in numbers and armament, and Russian operations beyond the border of his domains continue without cessation. That the rebels are receiving their increase of arms from Russia there is no doubt, and it is also true that the Ameer can command no force sufficiently strong to oppose the entrance of the Czar's troops to Afghanistan if their imperial master should feel disposed to order them there, while it would be impossible for the Indian Government to send an army to Herat or anywhere near that place before the Russian invaders could so fortify their position as to make it almost impregnable.

PACIFIC COAST TRADE.

Purchase of Six Large Steamers by the Canadian Pacific.

A San Francisco despatch says:—When the announcement was made some time ago that the traffic arrangement existing between the Pacific Coast Steamship Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was shortly to terminate, it was generally believed by railroad people that the efforts of the foreign line to disturb California freight rates would shortly cease. The managers of the Canadian Pacific had foreseen the possibility, and had taken measures to guard against their expulsion from the Pacific coast trade. About three months ago a Canadian Pacific agent went to Antwerp and purchased three six large and handsome steamers, the property of a large shipping firm which had recently become insolvent. Two of the steamers, laden with a cargo of fancy merchandise, are now on their way to this city by the way of Cape Horn. On their arrival the Canadian Pacific will be practically independent of the Pacific Coast and other steamship companies, and will be able to quote whatever rates it pleases to any point on its lines and will undoubtedly be a most favourable position to California as well as to Pacific coast business.

KILLED.

A Farmer Falls from a Load of Grain —His Neck Broken.

By Telephone to the Review.

MILLBROOK, Aug. 5—While Sanford Soden, a farmer who lives three and a half miles from here, was drawing in a load of grain yesterday, the waggon struck a root just before entering the barn door and he was thrown violently to the ground

When picked up it was found that his neck had been broken His death was so sudden that he uttered not a sound. The funeral proceeds to Port Hope to-morrow.

A Great Fire.

EAST SAGINAW, Mich., Aug. 4.—Yesterday afternoon a fire started in the saw mill of John Gowen of this city The saw mill and salt block, 8,000 barrels of salt, the drill houses, 3,500,000 feet of lumber, a blacksmith shop and the three salt drill houses were destroyed, involving a loss of $137,000. The insurance amounts to $50,000.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.

Given by the Commander of an American Man-of-War.

SOURIS, P.E.I., Aug. 4.—A correspondent at East Point says:—"A large fleet of American seiners were off here yesterday. An American man-of-war was also to be seen at anchor three or four miles from shore, whose commander boarded a number of American vessels and gave the captains, I am credibly informed, some wholesome advice. He told them that whenever they had occasion to call at Canadian ports, to allow none of their crew to land before entering at the customs, and to comply with the Canadian laws while in port in every particular. He also cautioned them against either fishing or preparing to fish within the three mile limit and 'if the Canadian cruisers be not there to seize you, I shall seize you myself.' He said, further, that in the event of a dispute arising as to the distance from shore between a cruiser and any of their vessels taken in the act of seining, that the latter should remain just where they were seining until the distance was ascertained by actual measurement, and he added: 'If you are within the limit the cruiser has you, and if not, so much the better for you. Do what is right and obey the laws of the country in which you are engaged in fishing, and you will have the American Government and, for that matter, the whole American nation to defend you, but remember you must obey the laws.'"

The Dynamite Thrower.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—Thomas J. Mooney, who threw a bottle containing explosives on the deck of the steamship Queen yesterday afternoon, was arraigned in the Jefferson Market Police Court. In his trunk were found two pieces of gaspipe, packages of powder, sulphur, phosphorous, crystals of chloride of potassium, several glass tubes and some blasting caps for Atlas powder, besides clothes and note books. Several yards of fuse and a box of draughtsmen instruments completed the list. The pipes were of heavy brass of unequal lengths, and at about one-third of the distance from one end of each was a cock which the police did not attempt to turn today. The shank of the cock was made of soft metal that could be eaten away by acid and placed in a smaller chamber and thus explode the contents of the larger. Capt. Gastlin, who made the examination, remarked, "Mooney was ready to blow up a fleet." He was remanded.

Murder in Montreal.

MONTREAL, Aug. 4.—John Carroll and D. O'Connor, two butchers in St. Ann's Market, have not been agreeing very well lately, and this afternoon O'Connor went up to Carroll and said he was doing all the business and he had better close his stall. This roused Carroll, who seized a carving knife and rushed at O'Connor and cut his throat to such extent that he died immediately after. Carroll has been arrested on a charge of murder.

Another Victim.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., Aug. 4.—Hon. Allen Francis, United States consul, died very suddenly at twelve o'clock last night. This adds another victim to the list of deaths resulting from the late railroad accidents. He was knocked down and seriously injured by the hose reel at that time. His death was quite unexpected, as he was apparently improving and passed a good day yesterday. The immediate cause of death was some affection of the heart.

Seizure of an American Vessel.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Aug. 4.—Yesterday the captain of the steam cruiser Intrepid seized the fishing boat Gold-dust, belonging to Blanchard, a sardine packer at Eastport, Me., while taking in fish at Fairhaven, Deer Island. This boat has been running all season without having once compiled with the law by entering or clearing at the Customs House. She was towed to St Andrew's, and orders from Ottawa awaited.

Father Paradis Acquitted.

OTTAWA, Aug. 4.—Father Paradis has won the first round in the log fight between himself and Gilmour & Co., the case brought against him for defacing marks having been dismissed with costs by the Hull Recorder, neither the prosecutors nor their counsel appearing in court. Father Paradis announces his intention of pushing his case against the Gilmours for stealing logs.

Supply Steamer Ashore.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich., Aug. 4.—The supply steamer Canada, which is supplying the Canadian light houses of the Upper Lakes, ran hard aground at Goulais Point, about fifty miles west of Sault Ste. Marie and sent here for assistance this afternoon, which will start at once to release her. The crew and passengers are perfectly safe and the Canada will probably be on her way again to-night.

Faction Fighting in Toronto.

A fife and drum band paraded the eastern past of the city on Thursday evening. The result was as usual a fight, which broke out about ten o'clock in the neighborhood of Queen and Sumach streets. The police who had been in readiness for a row, sailed and used their batons freely, dispersing the mob with several sore heads among them —Mail.

The Fisheries

WASHINGTON, Aug 4.—Nothing can be learned at the State Department with regard to the Toronto despatch asserting that fresh proposals for the settlement of the fisheries dispute had been recently submitted by the Washington authorities. Governor Porter, Acting Secretary of State, refused either to confirm or deny the story.

THE VISIT OF MGR. PERSICO.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—In the Commons this evening Thomas M. Sandys, Conservative, asked whether the Government was aware that the object of Mgr. Persico in visiting Ireland was principally to make a political, though nominally a religious, enquiry into the condition of the country. His question met with derisive cheers by the Parnellites. Hon. W. H. Smith said the Government was not cognizant of a Papal mission, having had no communication from the Pope on the subject. So far as the Government was concerned Mgr. Persico was a private individual who was visiting Ireland for reasons best known to himself. (Parnellite Cheers.)

ROCHEFORT AGAIN CHALLENGED.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—M. Garnier, an actor in the Bernhardt company, has challenged M. de Rochefort to fight a duel for publishing a derogatory article with reference to incidents that occurred while the company was at Rio Janeiro.

RUSHING BUSINESS.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The Government is making an enormous effort in the House of Commons to rush the Land bill through in order to make way for the Supply bill, and all parties are assisting to facilitate its progress. The ending of the committee stage left the Land bill in slipshod shape, and opened the way for further and almost interminable discussion during the report stage, should the Opposition feel disposed to engage in additional debate, but it is not thought that any serious opposition to the passage of the bill will now be made. The bill is immeasurably better for the tenants than they could have expected any Tory land scheme would be, and the Parnellite members realize that they have made exceptionally good terms, and are satisfied to let matters go as they are.

BULGARIA.

SOFIA, Aug. 4.—The Government has ordered that the state yacht, which is devoted to the use of the reigning prince, and which at present is moored at Rustchuk, be prepared for the reception of Prince Ferdinand. The Prince will go on board the yacht at Orsova, as he does not wish to touch at any place in Roumania.

NAVAL MANŒUVRES.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Naval manœuvres took place to-day off the mouth of the River Thames. The attacking squadon operated on the Downs, and with a force of marines and blue jackets, who were landed from the vessels, captured the entrance to the Thames and the River Medway. During the manœuvring a Nordenfeldt gun burst on board the torpedo boat Curlew and several seamen were seriously injured. One of the guns on board the Iron Armor plated ship Black Prince also burst and injured the seamen.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 5, 1887.

THE REFORM LEADER.

MR. LAURIER delivered his first public address, since assuming the position of leader of the Reform party, at Somerset, Quebec, on Tuesday. It was a moderate speech and did not contain many new departures. It can scarcely fail to disappoint that section of his party who have wished for a distinctive policy around which they could rally, and who, no doubt, hoped that their new leader would furnish them with it.

A large section of the party will be surprised to learn from Mr. Laurier that "the Maritime Provinces bear the burden of Confederation." They have been taught, and the people have been told by Reform leaders, that Ontario bore the chief burden, and that this Province was bled by the the other members of the federation. However, Mr. Laurier takes the other view, and those who follow his lead must accept his statement, even though it spoils their favorite "milch cow" metaphor. The new leader poses as a staunch supporter of Confederation, but his declarations of admiration for Confederation would have received more cordial acceptance if he had not coupled them with an attempt to arouse discontent in the Provinces, and to encourage the secession agitation, which stands so much in need of encouragement to keep it alive. The agitation has been little heard of for some time, but Mr. Laurier's statements that the Maritime Provinces bore the burden of Confederation, and that New Brunswick and Nova Scotia had been wronged, will tend to, if indeed they were not intended to, encourage that disloyal and injurious agitation which was inaugurated for party purposes.

Mr. Laurier so loudly proclaims his allegiance to the Queen that we may suppose he desires the Dominion, and this part of it particularly, to forget his speeches at the time of the formation of the National party in Quebec—a party that still exists and to which he belongs. The echoes of his "I would take up my musket" speech he would, no doubt, like to drown in Ontario by professions of loyalty, but it would be too much for him to expect that those who resented his expressed desire to have been on the banks of the Saskatchewan that he might shoot their sons of their neighbors' sons, will forget that he expressed such sentiments.

Provincial rights furnished Mr. Laurier with a them for a time, as also did the National Policy, and he repeated some of the old arguments regarding the tariff policy, arguing that it was a failure. It seems, therefore, that hostility to the National Policy is not to be dropped from the Reform platform. He did not declare himself in favor of Commercial Union. On this point he said he favored reciprocity, "such as existed from 1854 to 1870," but that he was not ready to declare that Commercial Union was a principle which ought to be adopted. His utterances on this question remind one of the hesitancy and timidity that characterized Mr. Blake; a fear to declare in favour of a certain policy, yet desiring to use it if political capital could be made out of it. Mr. Laurier holds out the hope to the commercial unionists that he may yet accept their ideas, but refuses to commit himself and remains in a position to advocate or oppose it. He would, however, accept the principle of commercial union between all nations who recognize the sovereignty of Great Britain.

On one question Mr. Laurier spoke plainly so far as he went. He opposes entirely the system of provincial subsidies. That small plank constitutes the only new timber in the platform. He did not undertake to explain what sources of revenue should be given to the provinces as a substitute for the subsidies, but it has been the custom of Reform leaders to find fault and to object without taking the people into their confidence as to their alternative policy, and probably Mr. Laurier does not wish to depart from the traditions of the party.

His policy, as outlined in this speech, is the old cry of provincial rights, encouragement of discontent and seditious agitators, attacks on the National Policy, reciprocity such as the present Government has offered to negotiate with the United States, and the abolition of provincial subsidies. It is not an attractive policy. It is not a policy that will win the confidence of the people of Canada. They have had enough of the setting up of one part of the Dominion against another, and desiring to build up a country, vigorous and united, the electors will not support a man who uses his position or his eloquence to foster discontent. They have no sympathy with disintegration, and having set out to build up the trade of the country by a policy of protection, which has been found successful, they will not reverse their thrice repeated decision at the bidding of Mr. Laurier any more than they did when urged to do so by Mr. Blake.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGAR

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc

"Good by," she wrote, "good by! We can never meet again, and it is better that we never should, in this world. Whether there is another I do not know. If there is, I shall wait for you there. If not, then good by forever. Think of me sometimes, for I have loved you very dearly, and as nobody will ever love you again; and while I live in this or any other world, and am myself, I shall always love you and you only. Don't forget me. I never shall be really dead to you until I am forgotten. J."

She lifted the paper off her knee and then put it back again and began to scribble in verse, quickly and almost without correction. It was a habit of hers, though she never showed what she wrote, and now it asserted itself irresistibly and half unconsciously:

When hands that clasp thine own in seeming truth,
Or linger in caress upon thy head,
Have rudely broke the idols of thy youth
And cast them down amid thy treasured dead,
Remember me"—

When she had got thus far she stopped, dissatisfied, and, running her pencil through the lines, began afresh:

"If I should die to-night
Then would'st thou look upon my quiet face,
Before they laid me in my resting place,
And deem that death had made it almost fair;

"And laying snow white flowers against my hair
Would'st on my cold cheek tender kisses press
And fold my hands with lingering caress,
Poor hands, so empty and so cold to-night!

"If I should die to-night
Then would'st thou call to mind with loving thought
Some kindly deed the icy hands had wrought,
Some tender words the frozen lips had said,
Errands on which the willing feet had sped;
The memory of my passion and my pride,
And every fault would sure be set aside.
So should I be forgiven of all to-night.

"Death waits on me to-night,
E'en now my summons echoes from afar,
And grave mists gather fast about my star—
Think gently of me; I am travel worn,
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn,
The bitter world has made my faint heart bleed.
When dreamless rest is mine I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night!"

She stopped, apparently more because she had got to the end of the paper than for any other reason, and, without even rereading what she had written, pushed the pass back into her bosom and was soon lost in thought.

Ten minutes later Jantje came creeping in to where she sat like a great snake in human form, his yellow face shining with the rain drops.

"Well," whispered Jess, looking up with a start, "have you done it?"

"No, missie, no. Baas Frank has but now gone to his tent. He has been talking to the clergyman, something about Missie Bessie, I don't know what. I was near, but he talked low and I could only hear the name."

"Have the Boers all gone to sleep?"

"All, missie, except the sentries."

"Is there a sentry before Baas Frank's tent?"

"No, missie, there is nobody near."

"What is the time, Jantje?"

"About three hours and a half after sundown" (10:30).

"Let us wait half an hour, and then you must go."

Accordingly they sat in silence. In silence they sat facing each other and their own thoughts. Presently Jantje broke it by drawing the big white handled knife and commencing to sharpen it on a piece of leather.

The sight made Jess feel sick. "Put the knife up," she said, quickly; "it is sharp enough."

Jantje obeyed with a feeble grin and the minutes passed on heavily.

"Now Jantje," she said at length, speaking huskily in her struggle to overcome the spasmodic contractions of her throat, "it is time for you to go."

The Hottentot fidgeted about, and at last spoke.

"Missie must come with me!"

"Come with you!" answered Jess, with a start; "why?"

"Because the ghost of the old English woman will come after me if I go alone."

"You fool!" said Jess angrily, and then, recollecting herself, added: "Come, be a man, Jantje; think of your father and mother, and be a man."

"I am a man," he answered sulkily, "and I will kill him like a man, but what good is a man against the ghost of a dead English woman? If I put the knife into her she would only make faces, and fire would come out of the hole. I will not go without you, missie."

"You must go," she said, fiercely; "you shall go!"

"No, missie, I will not go alone," he answered.

Jess looked at him and saw that he meant what he said. He was getting sulky, and the worst dispositioned donkey in the world is far, far easier to deal with than a sulky Hottentot. She must either give up the project or go with the man. Well, she was equally guilty one way or the other, and was really almost callous about being detected, so she might as well go. She had no power left to make fresh plans. Her mind seemed to be exhausted. Only she must keep out of the way at the last. She could not bear to be near then.

"Well," she said, "I will go with you, Jantje."

"Good, missie, that is all right now. You can keep off the ghost of the dead English woman while I kill Baas Frank. But first he must be fast asleep. Fast, fast asleep."

The Eve of a Great Battle.

The Scott Act in Toronto is the next slogan that will sound the onset of battle in this devoted city. The war chiefs among the Prohibitionists have taken counsel together and counted noses. They have counted up the cost, and the die is cast. As soon as cool weather comes the fray will commence. "Yes," said Mr. F. S. Spence yesterday, "we have decided to carry the war into Africa and the Scott Act in Toronto. Next winter will see the biggest Scott Act campaign ever undertaken, and Toronto will be the stamping ground. We will win, too."—Toronto World.

JESUS IN GALILEE.

EXPLANATORY NOTES BY REV. R. S. M'ARTHUR, D. D.

Lesson VI of the International Series (Third Quarter) for Sunday, Aug. 7. Text of the Lesson, Matt. iv. 17-25; Golden Text, Matt. iv. 16.

V. 17. Jesus as a Preacher.—From that time, i. e., from the time of his coming into Galilee; the time mentioned in verse 12, when John's imprisonment took place and his ministry came to an end. Christ had visited Galilee before and remained for a time at Capernaum. During the former visit Jesus had preached, and many disciples were made and baptized (John iv. 1), but now his preaching was public and frequent. He preached upon the same subject as John the Baptist had dwelt upon.

Repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—The substance of the Gospel is really the same under all dispensations. Christ was a preacher. We have not made enough of that feature of his work. As a preacher he began and as a preacher he closed his ministry. John, Jesus and Paul preached the same Gospel at different stages of its development. There is but one Gospel.

Vs. 18, 19.—Jesus calling two of his disciples to be his constant attendants. The Church of Christ could not be fully organized until after his atoning death and triumphant ascension and the descent of the Spirit; but Christ was now preparing for this subsequent organization by calling and training those who should under his guidance be its first great teachers. Walking by the Sea.—Certainly in the performance of his duty as a preacher, and not aimlessly walking by the sea. The Sea of Galilee.—This is the lake through which the Jordan flows with an observable current for a considerable distance. It is also called Gennesaret, from a plain or district on the western shore. It was also called the Sea of Tiberias. Called Peter.—This expression distinguishes the Simon from others of the same name. The name Peter had its origin in the words of Christ when he first met Simon. He was brought to him by his brother Andrew (John i, 42). At that time the name Cephas, which is the Aramaic for the Greek petros, meaning a rock, or more strictly a part of a rock, a stone, was given him. Perhaps the name was bestowed partly because of the boldness and firmness which he afterwards should manifest, and partly also as he was the first stone in the apostolic foundation which Christ was to lay, and on which the Church was afterward to be built. Andrew is a Greek name. Jews often adopted, as we have occasion frequently to see in the gospels, Gentile names. Whether he or Peter was the older it is impossible for us to say. Casting a net; a casting net. This form of expression originally distinguished this net from the large hauling net or drag net, to which reference is made in Matt. xiii. 47. For they were fishers.—This was their regular occupation, and not simply the work in which they were at this time engaged. This statement does not necessarily imply that they were poor or ignorant. Some of them we know were not poor; all of them we know were intelligent, although they did not have the learning of the schools. Men who could speak and write in more than one language were not illiterate, as the word is generally understood.

Hither! Behind me.—This language was true literally as well as figuratively and morally. Their place was behind, not before, the Master. They had already owned Christ as the Messiah, but had not until now abandoned their calling as fishermen. I will make you.—Christ alone possesses the authority to call and the ability to prepare men for his service. Formerly they provided for the support of men's bodies; now they were to care for men's souls. Their present employment, considered even in its details, admirably illustrates the methods to be employed and the results to be secured in their future work.

V. 20. Prompt obedience. The call according to this account seems abrupt. As already intimated, however, Luke gives what preceded it, showing it to be natural and appropriate. They were divinely moved to prompt obedience. God's call ought to be heard before the voice of man. Nothing must come between our souls and obedience to our Lord. Left nets.—This implies that the nets were their own. They left them forever.

Vs. 21, 22. Two others called. The calling of the second pair of brothers is now brought to our notice. Probably Jesus was now attended by Simon and Andrew, who had already become his attendants. James, son of Zebedee.—James, or Jacob, was a common name among the Jews, as the name of their great father Jacob. John his brother.—It is generally believed that John was the other disciple of John the Baptist, who with Andrew followed Jesus (John i, 35-37). This pair of brothers also was either actually engaged in their daily toil or preparing for it when Jesus called them to higher service.

V. 23. Jesus as teacher, preacher and healer. He now makes his first circuit of Galilee. The events narrated in the first three gospels occur chiefly in Galilee; those in John's gospel chiefly in Jerusalem and Judea. His ministry now became more systematic, covering all Galilee, and it has three special characteristics—teaching, preaching and healing. Teaching—Imparting knowledge of religious truth, the knowledge of the way of salvation. He would be regarded by many simply as a Jewish rabbi of great learning and aptness to teach. This was shown in their synagogues. Perhaps synagogues were first introduced during the Babylonish captivity. Then the people had lost their usual places of worship. Tradition, however, dates their origin at a much earlier period. In Christ's time synagogues abounded. In Jerusalem it is said that there were 480. Preaching the gospel; announcing, proclaiming the glad news—not only to the audiences that met in the synagogue, but to men and women wherever he met them, singly or in groups. Of the kingdom; that is, of the Messiah's reign—the new dispensation just introduced. Healing—This word, as Dr. Alexander suggests, originally meant serving or attending, and, as the result of such attendance, healing. All manner; that is, diseases of every kind.

V. 24. As the result of his work in these three directions his fame went throughout all Syria. His reputation went beyond Galilee and even beyond Israel, and extended even throughout the regions denoted by the general term Syria. His widely extended fame brought a great number of sufferers to him for help. Divers.—Originally parti-colored, but used to mean various kinds of anything to which it is applied. Torments.—Originally a touchstone for the trial of metals and then used for trial by torture. It thus came to mean extreme pain, whatever its cause might be. The great Physician is able to meet and to overcome all forms of disease. The phrase "those who were possessed with devils" is in Greek one word, which might be translated "demonized"—that is, under the power of demons. Lunatic.—Moonstruck; probably epileptic. The word then, as now, may have been used without reference to its original meaning. Those that had palsy, paralytics. This would include all morbid relaxations of the nerves, such as paralysis. Christ's power was equal to all these forms of disease, for we are told that he healed them. No difference how great the number, nor what was the nature of the disease. He bore our sicknesses.

V. 25. Decapolis.—So called because it contained ten (deka) cities (polis, a city). This verse is closely connected with the following chapter, and ought to be a part of it.

POINTS TO BE REMEMBERED.

1. Christ alone can call and prepare men to be preachers of the Gospel. This is his divine prerogative.

2. Men must repent. Their moral condition is wrong. They must confess and forsake their sins.

3. Christ calls all to be workers in his kingdom. Every boy and girl ought at once to obey that call. There is here no option, except the option which involves disobedience to Christ. No worldly attraction is to keep us from obeying his command. We refuse at our peril. We must leave all, take up our cross and follow him.

4. Sickness in the body is an emblem of the worst of all disease—sin in the soul. Satan still has power over men. There is no help for sin but in the almighty grace of Jesus Christ. Men must come to him to be healed of their spiritual maladies.—Sunday School World.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria,

Saved from the Wreck.

If the delicate organization of woman gets out of order, prompt application of remedial agents is required to save it from total wreck. In all such cases, whether to assist nature in the discharge of her functions, or to repair damage caused by disease of special organs, there is no remedy so mild, and yet so effective as Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," prepared at the World's Dispensary, at Buffalo, N. Y., and administered for many years to thousands of patients with the happiest results.

The citizens of Peterborough will seldom have the chance of hearing such a band as that of the Victoria Rifles, Montreal. There will doubtless be large numbers in attendance at the concerts to be given in the P. A. A. grounds on Tuesday and Wednesday evening.

Hot.

A gentlemen who cannot be suspected of having been overcome by St. Leon water says that while he was looking earnestly at the sun yesterday he saw the heat dropping from it in a liquid form. He prophisies a cold winter and a great sale for coal and wood. The thermometer went to 99 to-day.

Arbitration.

An arbitration between Mr. C. W. Sawers and the Grand Trunk Railway, in reference to the latter running a railway line through a park lot in the south end of the town belonging to the former, is in progress to-day. Mr. J. M. Irwin is arbitrator for the railway company, and Mr. H. T. Strickland for Mr. Sawers.

The Fire Department.

The improvements in the Fire Department are approaching completion. The electric alarm system will be completed in a few days, but the Babcocks have not yet arrived. When everything is in readiness Mr. Pell will come down from Toronto to inspect the department again, and the town will then be placed in class B.

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

Personal.

Kingston Daily News of August 7th, 1887, says:—"Mr. A. Wilson, who represents the Manufacturers' Life Insurance Company, is in the city introducing this new company to the public. The President is Sir John Macdonald, and the rates are below those of any company now in Canada. In a few days full details regarding rates, etc., will be published."

Firemen's Excursion.

The Firemen's excursion to Grimsby was held on Thursday. The train arrived in Toronto in good time and the excursionists there took the steamer Rupert and sailed to Grimsby. They enjoyed two hours and a half strolling about the park and listening to the open air concert given by the Fire Brigade Band. The excursion party returned without a mishap occurring. The train got back to town at a quarter to twelve o'clock.

KIDD has a line of Ladies' Kid Boots that he sells below wholesale prices, and no umbugging about it.

Spaulding's Bay.

During the past two weeks the street stretching across the lower end of Spaulding's Bay has been widened. The immediate cause of this action was to cover up nuisance which had been thrown there. The earth was taken from the corner of Perry street. If the owner of the lot to the south of the street would fill it in he would make for himself a valuable piece of property and remove a considerable amount of the cause of complaint. The water standing in this lot is entirely stagnant while that in the bay has a creek running through it.

The "Royal Flavoring Extracts" are made of great purity and strength. Take no other.

THE DEMONSTRATION.

Arrangements Progressing Most Satisfactorily—A Great Week.

The Oddfellows' demonstration, which commences on Tuesday next, will be without doubt the most brilliant affair of the kind ever held in Peterborough. From all over the Province letters come giving the most reassuring reports of the way in which it is proposed to turn out at the Peterborough demonstration.

Toronto will be down in full force; Ottawa will be here in large numbers; also London, Montreal, Belleville, Newmarket and other places. Excursions from all quarters will be run to Peterborough on every line converging at Peterborough. The hotel-men here are putting forth every effort to accomodate a crowd such as Peterborough has has never seen.

The local committees are hard at work at their respective duties. The Lansdowne Skating Rink is being converted into a huge barracks for the cantons, with the dining room in the centre of the building.

Two entries have been received for the sword dance, one from Toronto and one from Montreal. The sports are going to be first class, as indeed they ought considering the value of the prizes given. The horse races promise to be exciting, a number of outside horses coming to compete. A gentlemen from Toronto will judge the horse race and Dr. Halliday, Dr. Burnham and the Hon. R. Hamilton will be the judges of the sports. Dr. Brennan will be starter and Mr. R. W. Muncaster time keeper. The flags will be presented to the Captains of the Cantons by Miss Hamilton, daughter of the Hon. R. Hamilton.

The press is to be well represented. The Toronto World, News, Globe and Mail, and the Montreal Gazette, Herald, Witness and Star will all send correspondents.

A. C. A. CAMP.

The Meeting of the Northern Division at Stoney Lake.

A.C.A. CAMP, JUNIPER ISLAND, Aug. 4.—The arrivals still continue, among those yesterday being E. B. Edwards, the Commodore in 1883 when the camp of the A.C.A. was previously on this island. He received a hearty welcome from his old associates, who hardly expected him so soon, as he had returned from England only two days before.

On Tuesday evening there was a camp fire at Head Quarters, with a large attendance and some good singing.

There was a little breeze on Wednesday so there were various trials of speed and tests of sails and rigging, the lake being dotted with white sails. There were also various little excursions, among others one to Fairy Lake where a canoe being "portaged" a paddle could be had on the beautiful little piece of water so strangely situated among the rocks high above the level of Stoney Lake, and without visible ingress or egress, yet always full and clear.

On Wednesday evening there was another camp fire at Head Quarters with plenty of singing and some good music from stringed instruments.

This morning there is a general excursion to Eels Creek, which will fill up what promises to be another hot day.

Preparations are being made for the review and illuminated procession on Friday and the regatta which commences on Saturday.

AT THE RANGE.

The Third of the Monthly Matches—The Scores.

The August monthly rifle match, held under the auspices of the County of Peterborough Rifle Association, was held on Thursday afternoon. The attendance was fairly large.

The weather was very bright and hot, and a "fish tail" wind blew over the range, making the shooting very uncertain.

The score is as follows:—

	200	400	500	600	Total.
Geo. Fitzgerald	19	18	15	16	—68
W. A. Bell	21	16	11	8	—56
Dr. Bell	17	15	15	10	—55
F Hall	20	18	11	4	—53
W. H. Hill	18	15	17	10	—52
A. Blade	19	9	12	11	—51
J. B. Pentland	11	15	11	6	—44
D. Cameron	17	12	11	4	—44
Dr. Brennan	16	15	6	2	—39
W. A. Mason	14	9	6	9	—38
Geo. Hall	14	10	8	2	—34
F. Scringer	6	7	9	4	—26
E. G Stone	7	0	0	0	— 7

Three of the monthly matches have now been held, and the next and last one will decide who shall hold the Ontario Rifle Association cup. Those who go to the range to shoot at these matches have each time received prizes of ammunition from 80 rounds down to 10 rounds. Fourteen of these prizes are given out at every match.

POLICE COURT.

D. & D.

FRIDAY, Aug. 5.—Lawrence Hill, when he appeared before the Magistrate, didn't remember much about the mud turtle affair that happened at the corner of George and Hunter streets. This was good proof that he was partly guilty of the charge preferred against him, that of being drunk and disorderly. He acknowledged that he had been intoxicated. A fine of $5 or thirty days was imposed. He chose the latter not having the former.

Famous Generals as Cadets.

Charles Ward, a hackman at West Point, has a fund of information about the military academy and some of the now famous generals who were once cadets. A reporter visited West Point the other day and was driven through the grounds of the college by Ward. He appears to be 51 or 52 years old, is a large, broad shouldered man, with a full beard, streaked with gray, and an honest countenance. He was born in the town and has been there ever since.

"You knew them all, then—Lee, Sheridan and Grant?" asked the reporter.

"I knew the first two—that is I saw them when a boy and remember how they looked and acted. Gen. Lee was captain of the post here in 1853, and my father used to sell him milk every day. I can remember how Gen. Lee would say, with a smile, to my father: 'Now, I desire you to be careful and not get too much water in your milk. The milk you gave me the other day had a suspicious taste.' He said it, though, in such a kindly nice way my father never took any offense. Capt. Lee was the most soldierly looking of any of the cadets. Why, sir, when started to walk on the parade ground or from one quarter to another he went as straight as a bee line, and never looked back, it made no difference how much noise the other cadets made in his rear. He was straight, too, as an arrow, and not very stout. I shall never forget him as he looked in those days."—New York Mail and Express.

Manufacture of Tin Cans.

A striking instance of labor saving machinery is that which makes tin cans. One of the machines used in the process solders the longitudinal seams of the cans at the rate of fifty a minute, the cans rushing along in a continuous stream; of course a drop or two of solder is left on the can. The drop on the outside is easily wiped off, but it is not so easy to secure the drop left on the inside. An ingenious workman has patented an arrangement for wiping the inside of the can without stopping the machinery. Result, several thousand dollars in royalties in his own pocket and a saving of $15 worth of solder per day to the firm that uses it. Thirty thousand cans is a day's work for this machine.—Boston Transcript.

A Marketable Husband.

In Siam a man who has sold himself at gambling can compel his wife, if she has the money, to redeem him, but he thereupon becomes her property and chattel. This is a very equitable arrangement. The wife, if she desires, can sell her husband off, along with his summer pah'ben, for a plaster of paris image of Bismarck or a spotted dog. And we are not surprised a woman with such a husband should so desire, as was proved the other day when Ma Samut exchanged her better half for a share in a house near Wat Chang, a cow and twenty ticals in silver.—Bangkok Times.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1887.

PETERBOROUGH IN TORONTO.

The Home Team Wins at Cricket by 57.

The cricket match between Peterborough and Toronto was played yesterday and resulted in the defeat of the Torontos by 57 runs. A splendid wicket had been prepared, and the visiting eleven were decidedly lucky in winning the toss. The feature of the match was undoubtedly the fine display given by Mr. W. A. Stratton. He went in first and carried his bat out for an excellent 40. The game was started at 11 o'clock, the first two batsmen being H. Ray and Stratton. They were opposed by Rogers and Dickey. Runs at first came slowly. Ray was taken at point after putting together 4 His brother filled the vacancy and at once began to score. He was, however, well caught and bowled when he had made 8. Thomas came next, but after hitting a couple of threes and a single he succumbed to Rogers. Max. Hamilton was the next man on the list, and the scoring from both ends was rapid. A double change of bowling was tried, Rykert and Hall relieving Dickey and Rogers. The change at once worked, as Hamilton, in hitting out at a ball from Rykert, was easily secured by Duane. Rogers joined Stratton, who was well in and playing good cricket, and runs were put on at a great rate. The partnership was finally broken by the professional—who had gone on again—securing Rogers' wicket. The retiring batsman had played good cricket for his runs. The remaining batsmen did little or nothing. Logan, Stirling and Minore were bowled by Dickey in succession, and the bowler by accomplishing this feat thus did the "hat trick." The innings closed for 94. Out of this number Stratton made 40, not out. With the exception of a chance in the slips towards the latter part of the innings he had played splendid cricket for his runs, and he received a cordial reception as he walked to the pavilion. The Toronto innings was opened by Winslow and Smith, who faced the bowling of Logan and Hamilton. Nothing like a stand was made at any period of the innings, with the exception of Dunn, who quickly hit up 10 before he was dismissed. He was the only man to reach double figures. The game was stopped for over half an hour by rain, and the wicket did not play at all well afterwards. The innings closed for 37. Logan bowled admirably and claimed 5 wickets for 11 runs. The Peterborough men went in for their second innings and knocked up 37 for the loss of 2 wickets, when a heavy thunder shower came on and the captains decided to stop playing for the day.

THE GERMAN CROWN PRINCE.

Result of the Latest Operation upon His Throat.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—The Medical Record says a cable message from Dr. Mackenzie, of London, announces that a fourth operation upon the throat of the Crown Prince of Germany was performed on Tuesday in consequence of the recurrence of the disease. A platinum pointed galvano electrode was used for the purpose, carefully protectep with an ivory guard. On an examination of the throat immediately after the operation an eschar was to be seen in the centre of the base of the growth. The condition of the larynx was most satisfactory, there being no inflamatory reaction, the voice being good and the general health excellent. The nature of the operation would preclude the possibility of any microscopic examination of the diseased tissue being made. We are thus thrown in our estimate of the final results upon the purely clinical characters of the growth. It is gratifying to infer that there has not been as yet any serious encroachment of the disease upon the tissues of the vocal chords. In fact thus far everything appears to be favorable save a marked tendency to a recurrance of the disease. The latter, however, is of the greatest possible significance in estimating the probabilities regarding the ultimate malignancy of the growth. We regret to say that the outlook is not as encouraging as it might be. The best we can hope is that there will be no further disposition for the return of the growth.

FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

Northern and North-western and Canadian Pacific Trains Collide.

HAMILTON, Aug. 5.—This morning a special freight from this city on the Northern and North-Western railway was badly wrecked at Milton, and Conductor Thomas McCabe received serious if not fatal injuries. After the train arrived at a small way station about seven miles west of Milton, the engine was detached and proceeded up the line to do some shunting, leaving the train standing on the main line heavy grade in the direction of Milton at this time with brakes hard down. It seems there is a point, and shortly after the brakes began to slip, and soon the train was dashing down towards that station at a high rate of speed. Unfortunately a Canadian Pacific railway train was in the act of crossing at the junction and a collision took place. A large number of cars were smashed and a lot of live stock killed and injured. It is said that the total loss is $50,000. Conductor McCabe was asleep in the rear coach and knew nothing until the collision occurred. He was taken from the wreck unconscious, and is now in a critical condition. It is feared that his back is broken. The wreck was not cleared until late in the afternoon, and the trains from the north and south transferred their passengers and mails at the scene of the accident. McCabe is a young unmarried man and has lived in this city for the past three years. His parents live in Allandale.

NIAGARA FALLS PARK.

Colonel Gzowski Tells What is Being Done to Beautify It.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Colonel Gzowski was interviewed yesterday regarding matters at the Niagara Falls park. He says great improvements are in progress in the park. The property is being fenced in, new roads and driveways are being constructed, new bridges built, and in every way the place is as rapidly as possible being improved. Instead of the old dilapidated stairway by which the bed of the river was reached, it is intended to construct an elevator, with glass sides, so that the view can be seen all the way down. The whole matter of providing for sightseers will be in the hands of the commissioners, who will make the charges, and use the money thus obtained upon the park, instead of allowing money-making privileges to private parties. There will be no charge to enter the park propet, or to go about it, but there will be a small charge to cross the bridges to the island to use the elevator Guides and equipments will be provided to go under the walls, but in no case will the charge exceed fifty cents, a nominal figure compared with what the visitor has to pay on the American side.

LAKEFIELD.

ANNUAL SHOW.—The annual show of the Smith, Ennismore and Lakefield Agricultural Society will be held in the village on Thursday and Friday, Sept. 29th and 30th.

RUNAWAY.—On Saturday evening as the Rev. Father O'Brien was proceeding from South Douro, when about a mile from this place his horse suddenly became frightened and commenced to kick and plunge. The rev. gentleman was thrown forward on the shafts and received a slight kick on the jaw and had his arm hurt. The animal managed to free itself from the harness and broke into the woods but was captured before it had gone far. We are glad to say the accident did not prevent Father O'Brien from attending to his clerical duties on Sunday. —Chronicle.

GERMAN BAITING IN FRANCE.

BERLIN, Aug. 5.—The Deutsches Tageblatt, in an article headed "German Baiting in France," says: "If these persecutions continue and the French Government adopt corresponding measures, we should simply regard France as a barbarous, uncivilized nation and should break off diplomatic relations, discontinue railway and postal intercourse and throw out a line of military outposts. If the French play at war against us in time of peace let us do the same thing."

GLADSTONE AND WALES.

AN ANSWER TO CHURCHILL.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The success of the mimic naval attack on British ports will be seized upon by the Government to offset the criticisms of Lord Randolph Churchill, whose contention that the defences of the ports of the kingdom are entirely inadequate to the maintenance of public safety in time of war have created a profound sensation and a consequent feeling of insecurity among persons holding more or less pessimistic views.

SIR GEORGE TREVELYAN.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—A burst of enthusiastic cheering, which was heartily participated in by the Gladstonians, greeted the appearance and seating of Sir George Otto Trevelyan, the newly elected member for the Bridgeton division of Glasgow, in the House of Commons, last night. Cheer upon cheer arose as the repentant Unionist took his seat as a leading member of the Home Rule party, and the ovation must have been as gratifying to Sir George Trevelyan as that gentleman's return was to the allied forces of Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell. Sir George Trevelyan will dine with Mr. Gladstone to-day at the residence of Mr. Philip Stanhope, Gladstonian member for Wednesbury, and it is expected he will make an important speech on that occasion.

GREAT RAILWAY STRIKE.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—A general strike of the engineers and firemen on the Midland railway was begun at midnight. New men have been secured for the passenger trains. Many freight trains are at a standstill. The strike is against the order of the directors placing men on time wages. This, they claim, will prevent them from securing a full week's work. The drivers and firemen on the Lancashire and Yorkshire and other leading lines support the Midland employees in the stand they have taken.

A PANIC DURING A GAME.

CORK, August 5.—The series of hand ball games between Lawlor, the Irish champion, and Casey, of Brooklyn, N. Y., for a stake of $2,000 and the championship of the world, the match to be decided in favor of the player winning eleven out of twenty-one games, ten of which are to be played here and the remaining eleven in New York, was begun here yesterday. During the ninth game a cry was raised that the gallery was falling, and a panic ensued. some of the occupants of the gallery jumped to the floor below, a distance of twenty feet, and it was with great difficulty that order was restored. Meanwhile a disorderly crowd on the floor pushed into the players' court and play was postponed. Lawlor won five and Casey three of the games played.

THE DEAD RUSSIAN EDITOR.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The late Russian editor, Katkoff, would no doubt be surprised could he observe the diversity of political and religious views held by the persons who most conspicuously mourn his death. The Jews of St. Petersburg, the Fenians of Paris, and the members of the Patriotic League of France, attest the sincerity of their sorrow at his demise by passing resolutions of sympathy and condolence, and formulating declarations of their intention to send representatives to the funeral, and probably a greater variety of political opinion and religious faith will be personified in the gathering around his grave than have been brought together upon any similar occasion in recent years in any part of Europe.

THE BOULANGER FERRY AFFAIR.

PARIS, Aug. 5.—The Ferry-Boulanger affair has passed the stage of abstract criticism, and is no longer a question between the ex-Premier and the ex-War Minister, but between the former and the people of France. Popular opinion holds that General Boulanger would thoroughly uphold the honor of the French army and himself by proving M. Ferry a coward, and it is now incumbent on the latter to prove, not to General Boulanger, but to France, that he is not a poltroon.

FOREIGNERS IN RUSSIA.

CANALS.

A CONVENTION was recently held in Rochester to consider the question of lengthening the locks and deepening the channels of the New York canals. The attendance was large. Those opposed to the improvements had objected on account of the cost. President Clinton, in his address, argued that the cheap transportation which the canals compelled saved the consumers, even in the case of those residing farthest from the waterways, more than all the taxes they would be called upon to pay for the canals. Cheap transportation benefits all who have to purchase imported goods, as well as all who have articles of commerce, agricultural produce or manufactures, to send to outside markets.

A resolution adopted by the convention attributed the commercial supremacy of New York State to its geographical position on natural waterways and to its system of canals. The statistics produced showed that the shipments of grain on these artificial waterways from the opening of the canals to July 23rd exceeded the shipments for the corresponding period of 1886 by over a million bushels. The convention decided in favor of the proposed improvements, because they would reduce the cost of transportation and attract a largely increased traffic to New York and other cities of the State, thereby increasing the wealth and population of the cities, which would reduce the taxes upon the remainder of the State and make a largely increased market for the products of the State.

While it is desirable and greatly to the advantage of a country to pay attention to the building of railways, canals have an important bearing on the cost of transportation, and their construction, where they will open an outlet by water to markets which have to be reached, should not be neglected. That the New York State canals have been of great advantage to the principal city and to the state generally, and that they have benefitted other parts of the country, and thus conduced to the prosperity of the nation, is shown by the immense quantity of grain that is poured through these channels and the business they do. This means of transportation has received considerable attention from the Government of Canada, and rightly so. The action of the Rochester convention, and the the statistics quoted and facts produced, tend to show the value the completed Trent Valley Canal will be to the part of the country it will run through, and to the Dominion at large. As each portion of it is constructed, and the length of navigable waters extended by the connections thus made, local advantage results, and the completed waterway will be of great benefit to the whole country.

THERE is at least one Reform journal that is not satisfied with Mr. Laurier's first address as leader of the party. The Kingston Whig says:—

"Mr. Laurier is following in the foot steps of Mr. Blake in his treatment of fiscal questions. The people cannot admire timidity in a party leader, and it behooves Mr. Laurier to have definite ideas of some sort. He cannot hope to make the liberals a unit until he lays down a programme of some sort, the bolder and more aggressive the better, and sticks to it until the opportunity occurs for a test of its popularity."

Did not the Whig notice that Mr. Laurier said he could not do better than follow in Mr. Blake's foot steps? The demand of the Whig that a Reform leader should have definite ideas is one that will startle the leader, but when it goes further and demands that he shall stick to them it will surely be regarded as a base Tory.

THE Globe says that, to ascertain whether the United States and Great Britain will consent to Commercial Union, the Commercial Unionists must place the control of the Canadian Government in the hands of men who will endeavor to obtain their consent. The Globe, however, neglects to inform them who those men are—a somewhat important omission. Besides, it is probable that others will have something to say about the control of the Govetnment.

THE London Advertiser says that Mr. Laurier's speech "was clear and candid, and left no doubt as to where he stands on the issues of the day." Is this an admission that Commercial Union is not an issue of the day? If not, where does Mr. Laurier stand on that issue?

SNOWDEN.

CHILD BURNED TO DEATH.—One of the most heartrending scenes ever witnessed in this back country took place on Monday. William Egan, who resides near Little Ireland, having built a new house was moving in. On Monday, Mrs. Egan had her two children went over to the new dwelling, whilst engaged in fixing up, and near mid-day she went over to the old house to prpeare dinner, leaving the children, the infant being asleep in the cradle, and the elder one a young child, to look after it. How it happened no one knows, but in a short time Mrs. Egan heard the elder child screaming and on rushing out beheld it running towards her and the new house a mass of flame. Terror stricken with fright, she was unable to move for some moments, and then ran to the blazing building. A neighbor noticing the fire also ran over but it was too late. For a few seconds which seemed hours to the frenzied mother the pitiful screams of the infant could be heard. Gradually they grew fainter and then nothing but the horrible crackling of the burning timbers was to be heard. It was a lamentably sad scene, and the poor mother has the heartfelt sympathy of the settlement.—Bobcaygeon Independent.

D'ARCY M'GEE'S MURDER.

Likelihood of the Whole Story Being Re-opened.

The tragic death of poor D'Arcy McGee, says the Montreal Star, is it appears, to be brought before the public again through a sensational despatch sent to the Boston Herald having been reproduced by certain Canadian journals, and which has caused Mr. John O'Farrell, the well known criminal lawyer of Quebec, to take action against these papers. On Thursday he made an affidavit in the Police Court, Quebec against the Montreal Herald and L'Evenement and La Canadien of Quebec. Mr. O'Farrell asserts that it is there insinuated that he was the murderer. Mr. O'Farrell is indignant, and the damages are laid at $50,000. The article complained of is as follows:—

BOSTON, Aug. 1.—The Herald this morning publishes the following despatch from Ottawa:—"A great sensation has been caused here by the statement, on good authority, evidently, that the true murderer of D'Arcy McGee escaped the penalty of the law, while Whalen, an innocent man, was made the victim of circumstantial evidence. It will be remembered that when James Whalen was executed here for the murder of McGee grave doubts were entertained as to his being the murderer. He died protesting his innocence. It has been stated that a son of Mrs. Trotter, where McGee lived, and who has since died in the States, declared that Whalen was not the murderer. Young Trotter was, at the time of the murder, in the Commons of Canada, and they left the house about the same time. Trotter was on the ground shortly after the shot was fired. The story told by the lawyer and rapidly rising politician yesterday morning confirms his story. He states that he was 11 years of age and was at Ottowa College. He had gone out for the night to hear the expected debate in the house, and on his way home saw two men in front of Trotter's house; one of them was a well known criminal lawyer, of Quebec, and the other Whalen. Whalen had a pistol in his hand, but his courage failed when McGee came to the door. His comrade took the pistol, fired the shot which ended McGee's life, shoved it back into Whalen's hand, got into a team close by and drove rapidly away. Some startling developments are expected in connection with this mattter within a few days."

Quebec, Aug. 5.—Le Canadien apologizes to-day for the publication of the sensational report from Ottawa and Boston about the McGeemurder. It says it believes Mr. John O'Farrell to be wrong in assuming that it applies to him, but in any case, it declares that it was not its intention to designate him as Mr. McGee's murderer, and that it does not believe him guilty of a crime upon which the justice of the country has pronounced and which its autnor has expiated on the scaffold.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGAR

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc

Then slowly and with the utmost caution they once more crept down the hill. This time there was no light to be seen in the direction of the wagon house, and no sound to be heard except the regular tramp of the sentries. But their business did not lie in the direction of the wagon house; they left that on their right and curved round toward the blue gum avenue. When they got nearly opposite to the first tree they halted in a patch of stones, and Jantje went forward to reconnoitre. Presently he returned with the intelligence that all the Boers who were with the wagon had gone to sleep, but that Muller was still sitting in his tent thinking. Then they crept on, perfectly sure that if they were not heard they would not be seen, curtained as they were by the dense mist and darkness, till at length they reached the bole of the first big gum tree. Five paces from this tree Frank Muller's tent was pitched. It had a light in it which caused the wet tent to glow in the mist, as though it had been rubbed with phosphorus, and on this lurid canvas the shadow of Frank Muller was gigantically limned. He was so placed that the light cast a magnified reflection of his every feature and even of his expression upon the screen before them. The attitude in which he was seated was his favorite one when he was plunged in thought, his hands resting on his knees and his gaze fixed on vacancy. He was thinking of his triumph, and of all that he had gone through to win it and of all that it would bring him. He held the trump cards now, and the game was in his own hand. He had triumphed, and yet over him hung the shadow of that curse that dogs the presence of our accomplished desires. Too often, even with the innocent, does the seed of our destruction lurk in the rich blossom of our hopes, and much more is this so with the guilty. Somehow this thought was present in his mind to-night, and in a rough, half educated way he grasped its truth. Once more the saying of the old Boer general rose in his mind: "I believe that there is a God—I believe that God sets a limit to a man's doings. If he is going too far, God kills him."

What a dreadful thing it would be if the old fool were right after all! Supposing that there were a God, and God were to kill him to-night, and hurry off his soul, if he had one, to some dim place of unending fear! All his superstitions awoke at the thought, and he shivered so violently that the shadow of the shiver caused the outlines of the gigantic form upon the canvas to tremble up and down.

Then, rising with an angry curse, he hastily threw off his outer clothing, and having turned down but not extinguished the rough paraffine lamp, flung himself upon the little camp bedstead, which creaked and groaned beneath his weight like a thing in pain.

Then came silence, only broken by the drip, drip of the rain from the gum leaves overhead and the rattling of the boughs whenever a breath of air stirred them. It was an eerie and depressing night, a night that might well have tried the nerves of any strong man who, wet through and worn out, had been obliged to crouch upon the open and endure it. How much more awful was it then to the unfortunate woman who, half broken hearted, fever stricken and well nigh crazed with suffering of mind and body, waited in it to see murder done! Slowly the minutes passed, and at every raindrop or rustle of a bough her guilty conscience summoned up a host of fears. But by the mere power of her will she kept them down. She would go through with it. Yes, she would go through with it. Surely he must be asleep by now!

They crept up to the tent and placed their ears within two inches of his head. Yes, he was asleep; the sound of his breathing rose and fell with the regularity of an infant's.

Jess turned round and touched her companion upon the shoulder. He did not move, but she felt that his arm was shaking.

"Now," she whispered.

Still he hung back. It was evident to her that the long waiting had taken the courage out of him.

"Be a man," she whispered again, so low that the sound scarcely reached his ears, although her lips were almost touching them, "go, and mind you strike home!"

Then at last she heard him softly draw the great knife from the sheath, and in another second he had glided from her side. Presently she saw the line of light that cut out upon the darkness through the opening of the tent broaden a little, and by that she knew that he was creeping in upon his dreadful errand. Then she turned her head and put her fingers in her ears. But even so she could see a long line of shadow traveling across the skirt of the tent. So she shut her eyes also and waited, sick at heart, for she did not dare move.

Presently—it might have been five minutes or only half a minute afterward, for she had lost count of time, she felt somebody touch her on the arm. It was Jantje.

"Is it done?" she whispered again.

He shook his head and drew her away from the tent. In going her foot caught in one of the guide ropes and shook it slightly.

"I could not do it, missie," he said. "He is asleep and looks just like a child. When I lifted the knife he smiled in his sleep, and all the strength went out of my arm, so that I could not strike. And then before I could get strong again the ghost of the old Englishwoman came and hit me in the back and I ran away."

If a look could have blasted a man Jantje would assuredly have been blasted then. The man's cowardice made her mad, but while she still choked with wrath a duiker buck, which had come down from its stony home to feed upon the rose bushes, suddenly sprang with a crash almost from her feet, passing away like a gray gleam into the utter darkness.

Jess started and then recovered herself, guessing what it was, but the miserable Hottentot was overcome with terror and fell upon the ground groaning out that it was the ghost of the old Englishwoman. He had dropped the knife as he fell, and Jess, seeing the imminent perit in which they were placed, knelt down, picked it up, and hissed into his ear that if he were not quiet she would kill him.

This pacified him a little, but no earthly power could persuade him to enter the tent again.

What was to be done? What could she do? For two minutes or more she buried her face in her wet hands and thought wildly and despairingly.

Then a dark and dreadful determination entered her mind. The man Muller should not escape. Bessie should not be sacrificed to him. Rather than that, she would do the deed herself.

FISHERS OF MEN.

BY L. A. MORRISON, TORONTO.

"And He said unto them, come ye after Me, and I will make you fishers of men." Matt. iv. 19, (Revision)

"Fishers of men!" 'tis the voice of the Master
Calling His children to-day, as of old;
Calling them up to a work that is vaster;
Calling them,
Each of them,
Out of the moil of the mirk and the mold;
Away from the stain of the earth-work, so lowly,
Up to His sanctified labor, so holy.

"Fishers of men!" from the waves of perdition;
Calling them back from the shallows of sin;
Calling them up from its penal fruition;
Calling them,
Each of them,
Kindly and lovingly, now to come in,
Away from the stain of the earth-life, so lowly,
Up to a life that is God-like and holy.

"Fishers of men!" and the One who commandeth—
Calling His servants by name—is the King,
Calling them up to the light where He standeth;
Calling them,
Each of them,
Tribute of loving life-service to bring;
Away from the night of the earth-life, so lowly,
Up to the light of His home-life, so holy.

"Fishers of men!" In our heart-beats we hear Him
Calling to each with importunate breath;
Calling them up in His love to be near Him;
Calling them,
Each of them,
Out of the bondage of darkness and death;
Away from the earth-life, so sinful and lowly,
Up to the home-life, eternal and holy.

WEATHER NOTES.—Another month of extreme heat has come ann gone. A hotter than the one just closed I believe is not on record in Canada. The lowest temperature any time during the day, or what we style our coldest, was on the 10th, namely, 72 degrees in the shade. The hottest was on the 16th, the thermometer standing for over three hours at 95 degrees, but taking the heat at sunrise it was 75 degrees, at 3 p. m. 92 degrees, and at sunset 85 degrees, averaging 84 degrees, while on the 16th at sunrise it was 60 degrees, at 3 p. m. 95 degrees, and at sunset 85 degrees, averaging only 80 degrees, while the month at sunrise and sunset averaged 69 degrees. Rain fell on 10 days to the depth of 2 inches and 41-100 of an inch. This may seem large, but it should be remembered that on the 2nd during the heavy storm of rain and hail, accompanied with wind and thunder, it fell 1 inch and 35-100 of an inch. In fact all our rain during the month has only been local showers. We had thunder on 6 days, but sometimes little rain. On no occasion has it inclined to frost. Only once, on the morning of the 7th, was the thermometer down at 52 degrees. There was fog only once, on the morning of the 21st. Barley was first cut on the 9th and fall wheat onthe 11th, botn being very early. The following are the different points from which the wind was blowing at sunrise during the month, namely:—Southwest 8 days; southeast 5 days; west 7 days; northwest 6 days; north 1 day; south 3 days; and northeast 1 day. Wednesday, the 3rd of August, at 3 p. m. the thermometer stood at 94 degrees in the shade. On Thursday, the 5th of August, at 2 p. m. the thermometer stood at 97 degrees in the shade, this being hotter than any previous day.

Saved from the Wreck.

If the delicate organization of woman gets out of order, prompt application of remedial agents is required to save it from total wreck, in all such cases, whether to assist nature in the discharge of her functions, or to repair damage caused by diseases of special organs, there is no remedy so mild, and yet so effective as Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," prepared at the World's Dispensary, at Buffalo, N. Y., and administered for many years to thousands of patients with the happiest results.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

All Records Beaten.

During the past week seven dozen of pure silk handkerchiefs were sold at J. J. SHEEHEY's at the low price of 25 cents each.

A PAIR of Ladies' Button Boots and a Bottle of Good Polish for 80 cts. at KIDD's.

Male Choir.

Mr. L. Seward has consented to conduct the male choir of the Young Men's Christian Association, and will meet the members of it on Monday evening next, at eight o'clock, in the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

Struck by Lightning.

A barn in the township of Smith on the farm of Mr. John Moore was struck by lightning at about six o'clock on Friday evening. The place was soon reduced to ashes, the crop just gathered into it making the fire a fierce one. There was an insurance on the barn, and Mr. Frank Anderson, the tenant of the farm, had an insurance on the grain.

More Oddfellows.

Peterborough seems to possess a wonderful attraction for Oddfellows. The Canadian Order will follow in the wake of the Independent Order and on August 15th will invade town in large number from Toronto. The bills announce an excursion to "the beautiful and rising young city of Peterborough, with two parks free to the public."

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

Personal.

The Belleville Intelligencer says;—"Mr. Thos. L. Bayeur, for a number of years past engaged in the boot and shoe business next door to the Henderson House, advertises his entire stock for sale as he intends to remove to Peterborough. Mr. Bayeur is an enterprising business man of ability and intergity. He has served on the Seperate School board here faithfully and well, and been a citizen that busines men will regret to lose."

Horticultural.

A meeting of the Directors of the Horticultural Society was held in Mr. J. H. Roper's office on Friday afternoon. A variety of business came before the board. The thanks of the Society were tendered to the Town and County Councils for their donations, and to the Electric Light and Gas Companies for supplying illumination. A number of accounts were ordered to be paid. A request was sent to the Orangemen to pay to the Society the sum of $35, the estimated dammge done to the Gardens on July 12th.

Rice Lake.

Parties wanting a pleasure sail cannot do better than take the steamer Golden Eye, which leaves the C.P.R. wharf at 7.30 a. m., and get landed at Jubilee Point, where there are tables for dining on, a spring of water, and the best of fishing. Those wishing to take a sail on the lake, can continue on to Idyl Wild. Meals are provided on the boat, or at Idyl Wild, for 25 cents. This beautiful trip can be enjoyed for 75 cents return tickets. Special arrangements for parties of 20 (twenty). d25

Have Arrived.

Prof. J. H. Lopez, who met with such flattering success in Lindsay last year, has arrived in Peterborough accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Needham. Mrs. Needham, as portrait and animal painter, is quite clever, having taught for the past seven years in the finest art schools of the East, and is considered one of the best teachers in her specialty. Studio will be opened Tuesday, Aug. 9th, on Hunter street, next door to Brisbin's feed store, where they will exhibit several thousand dollars worth of oil paintings done by themselves. All are invited to call on Tuesday, Aug. 9th. 1d32

The Churches.

The following is a list of services in the several churches to-morrow:—

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.—At St. Peter's Cathedral, Roman Catholic, there will be three masses celebrated, the first at 7 a. m. the second at 8 a. m., and the third at 10.30 a. m. Vespers at 7 p. m.

A DEMAND FOR MONEY.

TWELVE THOUSAND DOLLARS WANTED

To Run the Education Machine for the Next Year—Mr. W. G. Morrow Appointed the new Secretary-Treasurer.

The adjourned meeting of the Board of Education was held on Friday evening.

There were present: Mr. James Stevenson, Chairman, and Messrs. Sproule, Stratton, Burnham, English, Wrighton, Wier, A. Rutherford, Muncaster, T. Rutherford, Dumble, and McWilliams.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The following communications were read:—

From Miss Greenwood tendering her resignation—Accepted.

From the Educational Department giving details of defects of the Collegiate Institute—Received.

From F. E. Bell applying for the Secretaryship of the Board on condition that the late Secretary's son was not appointed.

From John S. Dobbin. W. G. Morrow, W. J. Hall, applying for the Secretaryship of the Board—Received.

ACCOUNT.

The following account was received;—

The Times, advertising..... $ 4 50

The account was ordered to be paid.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

The following report of school attendance for the month of June:

	On Roll.	Ave. Att.
Collegiate Institute.....		121
West Ward School.....	169	116
Central School.....	653	561

COMMITTEE ON APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. DUMBLE made a verbal report stating that the committee had advertised for a teacher to take Miss Greenwood's place, as they knew they would have to do it. They had several applications but they expected to receive more.

Mr. RUTHERFORD asked about the payment of teachers' increases of salaries without the sanction of the Board.

Mr. DUMBLE, chairman of the committee, stated that it was quite true that the matter of salaries did not come before the Board, but the committee consisted of the whole Board, and it had passed in the committee unanimously. The committee did not alter the salaries but left them as they were.

CONDOLENCE.

Mr. STRATTON moved, seconded by Dr. BURNHAM,—Whereas Mr. W. A. Morrow, for ten years the efficient and painstaking and respected Secretary Treasurer of the Board has been relieved of his duties by death, resolved that the board desires to place on record and expression of its high appreciation of his services and its deep regret at being deprived of his valuable services; that it tenders to his bereaved widow and family its earnest assurance of condolence and sympathy with them in their irreparable affliction; and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Mrs. Morrow.

Mr. RUTHERFORD said that a few days previous to his death Mr. Morrow had expressed his great satisfaction at the way the Board had dealt with him.

Mr. SPROULE said that Mr. Morrow was an upright, honest man.

The Chairman spoke of Mr. Morrow as being painstaking and careful.

MONEY.

The CHAIRMAN announced that the estimates had been carefully gone over by the Finance Committee, and it was found that they could not get along with less than $12,000 this year. This was an increase of $1,000 over last year, but the shortage of last year had to be met.

Mr. STRATTON moved a formal resolution endorsing the demand made by the Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. RUTHERFORD accused the Board of laxity. These estimates should be before the Board. The estimates were laid before the Board on former occasions.

Mr. STRATTON taunted Mr. Rutherford at having been at the committee meeting and at taking so little interest in the estimates that he would not look at them. Mr. Rutherford suddenly took interest in them when they weren't here.

Mr. DUMBLE felt that this wrangle should not take place. Circumstances which they all lamented had occurred, and everything could not be expected to run so smoothly as they would had not these circumstances occurred.

Mr. WRIGHTON said he examined the estimates and that they could not do with less than $12,000.

CHANGE.

Moved by J. R. STRATTON, seconded by Mr. MCWILLIAMS—That the Secretary of this Board be requested to notify the Minister of Education that a properly qualified teacher will be employed by the Board of Education in place of Miss Greenwood who has resigned. That gas and water will also be at once supplied the science master and that the other matters referred to in the Inspector's report will receive the due consideration of the Board and carried out at the earliest possible moment.—Carried.

THE SECRETARY.

Mr DUMBLE moved, seconded by Mr. WRIGHTON—That Mr. W. G. Morrow, son of the late Secretary, be appointed Secretary-Treasurer of this Board and that he be required to give bonds for the performance of his duties to the satisfaction of the Finanse Committee. Salary to be the same as paid the late Secretary.

KIDD has a line of Ladies' Kid Boots that he sells below wholesale prices, and no umbugging about it.

NEAR AT HAND.

Completing Arrangements for Receiving the Visiting Oddfellows.

A meeting of the ladies who will assist at the Charlotte Street Skating Rink dining room, was held at the rink on Friday afternoon. A good deal of detail work was done and the meeting adjourned till Monday evening.

The arrival of the visitors will commence on Monday night, when the Grand Encampment representatives will reach town. On Tuesday and Tuesday night, the Grand Lodge representatives will arrive. The Montreal Canton, accompanied by the Victoria Rifles band and their highland pipers, will arrive in town on Tuesday morning at 5 30 o'clock. They will be met at the C. P. R. station by the Fire Brigade Band and escorted to the skating rink, where they will have breakfast. At 9 o'clock the Victoria Rifles band will escort the Grand Encampment to the Court House. The Ottawa Canton will reach town at 6.42, a. m.; Newmarket at 11.30; Toronto and Hamilton at 8.50 p. m.; and London at 11 o'clock on Tuesday night. As they reach town the various cantons will be received at their quarters in the rink.

The entertainment committee will meet at nine o'clock this evening at the rink. Every member of the committee is wanted as there is a lot of work to do yet.

The Oddfellows would consider it a favor if those having promised provisions would send their donations to the rink. If they are not called for it will be purely an oversight. The provisions may be sent to the rink on Monday afternoon.

The flags to be presented to the Cantons are of a very pretty and costly design. They are made of silk in three colours, white, red and purple. The letters "P.M." (Patriarchs Militant) and a crown crossed by a shepherd's crook and sword are all worked in gold. The staff is surmounted by a brass ball. They are displayed in the window of Hibbliment Hall.

A. C. A. CAMP.

The Meeting of the Northern Division at Stoney Lake.

A.C.A. CAMP, JUNIPER ISLAND, Aug. 5—The excursion yesterday to Eels Creek took a number of canoes towards the head of the lake. Most contented themselves with admiring the beautiful spot at the mouth of the creek, but a few of the more enthusiastic portaged a canoe and proceeded up the stream for some distance. A fresh breeze sprang up soon after noon, and tested the seamanship of some of the novices on the return trip.

On the arrival at the camp it was found that a number of visitors had joined, among others Mr. W. J. White, Lake St. Louis C. C., (son of Mr. Richard White of the Montreal Gazette) and Col. J. Z. Rogers and Dr. Douglas, who had returned to camp.

In the evening there was a very successful canoe parade and some charming singing on the water.

There is still a fresh breeze this morning delighting the hearts of venturesome sailors.

Notice to Bridge-Builders.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tender for Bridges, Trent Navigation," will be received at this office until the arrival of the Eastern and Western Mails on THURSDAY, THE 25TH DAY OF AUGUST, instant, for the construction of Swing Bridges at several places on the line of the Trent Navigation. They are to be a combination of iron and wood.

Plans, specifications and general conditions can be seen at this office on and after THURSDAY, THE 11 TH DAY OF AUGUST, instant, where forms of tender can also be obtained.

Parties tendering are expected to have a practical knowledge of the class of works required, and are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and—in the case of firms—except there are attached the actual signatures and nature of the occupation of each member of the same. Further a bank deposit receipt for the sum of $250, for each bridge for which the offer is made must accompany the tender, which sum shall be forfeited if the party tendering decline to enter into contract at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The deposit receipt thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

This department does not however bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

THE MIDLAND RAILWAY STRIKE.

Probability That the Company Will Win—Want of Organization.

LONDON, Aug 6.—The striking engineers and firemen, designated in English railway nomenclature, as drivers and stokers, will probably be unsuccessful in their struggle against the Midland Railway to compel that corporation to rescind or modify its edict requiring the wages of their train hands to be paid at the rate of so much per hour instead of the per diem compensation they have hitherto received. The 4000 men who struck work made a great hole in the company's most active and necessary force of employes, but the craftsmen engaged in the contest lack the cohesion and organization of their American brethren, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, and are at the mercy of the army of "rat" engineers and machinists that infest London and whose components live upon the proceeds of odd jobs. These men are flocking to the assistance of the company in large numbers, and the other railways are contributing as many of their engineers and firemen as can be induced to man the Midland's engines through cover, and intimidation that dismissal will follow refusal. The Midland Railway, in many cases, uses the tracks of other lines, and its peculiar relations with these companies enables it to call upon them for assistance, with the full assurance of its being forthcoming, and with these advantages, and together with those derived from the disorganized state of the strikers, the vast amount of capable men out of employment and the mercenary disposition of those who have work but are ever on the alert to better their condition at no matter what cost to others, the railway is almost sure to win in the end.

SERIES OF FATALITIES.

Many Persons Lose their Lives in the Maritime Provinces.

HALIFAX, N. S., Aug. 6.—An unusual number of fatalities are reported from all parts of the province. At Painsec Junction, last evening, the three year old son of Thomas King, section foreman, was playing on the track when a special came along. As the engine approached, the little fellow ran off the track and on again, putting up his little hand as if to ward off the blow. The engine struck him, knocking him thirty feet, crushing his skull and breaking his thigh. This makes the third family of railway section formen bereaved this week, viz., Walter Dunbrack, crushed to death by a steam shovel at Penobsquis on Monday; Miles Hoar's son, crushed to death between cars at Sackville on Tuesday and last evening's accident at Painsec.

The third fatal accident on the Pictou Branch Railway since the beginning of the construction occurred to-day. While a train was in motion Robert Elliott jumped of a flat car into a cutting, and in doing so fell back, the result being he was horribly mutilated.

At Moncton, Moses Jones, aged 22, fell from a load of hay, broke his neck, and died instantaneously.

At Torbay, Joseph Avery aged 20, while mackerel fishing, was knocked out of his boat by the jibing of a sail and drowned.

Abraham Doucette died at Rustico, P. E. I., from a similar cause.

A STEAMER CAPSIZED.

Loaded with Excursionists—Five Known to have been Lost.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Aug. 5.—The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers had a picnic at Lake Monowa. While one of the boats was returned from Manhattan Beach with a party of bathers on board she sprang a leak during a squall and sank. Four persons are missing.

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 5.—Late advices from Lake Monowa state that there were fully thirty excursionists on the steamer which capsized last night. Five are known to have been drowned and it is thought two or three others shared the same fate.

A Valuable Discovery.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.—As Mr. Dawson Gifford, a farmer, with his wife and daughter, were driving along Ontario street to town on Saturday, the team of greys took fright at a threshing machine which was working in Mr. McCormick's field, and running to the other side of the road, threw Mr. Gifford out, cutting his head badly, and he was taken into Mr. John Walker's house. The team then ran down the street until they came in contact with a telegraph pole in front of Mrs. Gillespie's, one horse going on each side of it, and Mrs. Gifford and daughter thrown out. Mrs. Gifford fell on her shoulders sustaining severe internal injuries. She was taken into Mrs. Gillespie's. The daughter escaped with slight bruises. Dr. Powers was called in, and it was found necessary to put three stitches in Mr. Gifford's throat and two over his eye, while his head was badly cut, and it is feared he also suffered internal injuries. Mr. and Mrs. Gifford were able to return to their home in the afternoon. They both had a very narrow escape.—Times.

An Estate of Over a Million Acres.

Thursday last, at the Mart, Tokenhouse Yaid, Messrs. Wells and Read offered to public auction the freehold domains of an enormous estate situated in the province of Vefsen, in Norway, and about 200 miles north of Trondhjem, lying between 65 and 66 north latitude; no portion of it reached beyond the temperate zone. It was described as occupying a fiftieth part of the whole country, the area being 1,200,000 acres, or 2,000 square miles, and the number of farms was 168. It was also stated to be rich in timber and mineral productions, which were capable of very great development. In one respect, as the auctioneer said it was unique being the largest estate that was ever offered for sale, and presented an exception to the custom of the country, where the farmer is generally the owner of his occupation. Within its boundaries was situated the Lake Ros Vand, one of the largest inland waters of Norway. The sporting rights, over 200 miles of river and lake were reserved, affording some of the finest wild shooting and fishing in the north of Europe. The estate was easy of access, as much so as the highlands formerly were, and the climate in the summer months was exceedingly pleasant. There was no serious offer for it, for the small sum of £6,500 that was named, or about 1d. per acre, could scarcely be so considered, and the property was withdrawn.—London Times.

After a Murderer.

OTTAWA, Aug. 6.—The township of Edwardsburg, on the St. Lawrence river, in Dundas county, is the scene of much excitement over a search that is being carried on for King, who is wanted at Maloney, N. Y., on a charge of murder. King is supposed to be hiding in the vicinity just now and a reward of $2,500 which is offered for his capture has brought county bailiffs and local detectives hotly upon his trail. The alleged criminal has been seen several times in the last couple of weeks. He is well armed, and is supposed to be hiding in the swamps of the township named. It is thought that he will be unable to escape. He has already payed secret visits to farmers' houses and compelled the inmates to give him food.

The Dynamite Crank.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—It is learned that Mooney, who attempted to set fire to the steamer Queen last Wednesday, has for years been crazy on the subject of English oppression and dynamite. His only legitimate business in this country, so far as known, was that of a sewing machine agent. It is said that he was a member of the London police force over fifteen years ago, and is believed to be an old expelled member of the "Clan na Gael." He admits being an ally of O'Donovan Rossa, and one story has it that he was expelled from the Fenian Brotherhood for blackmailing.

The Tobacco Interest.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 6.—The July report of the agricultural bureau at Washington has stirred up the tobacco interests all over Kentucky. The report put the crop at 82 per cent. of an average, while it is alleged to be well known to all who have paid any attention to the matter that it cannot be more than half so large. A committee will go to Washington to see the President about it. There is a feeling that Commissioner Coleman should give some guarantee that a similar blunder will not occur or he should be asked to resign.

Mines Near Madoc.

We learn that a company from Toronto have purchased the marble deposit on Mr. Seymour's farm, near the T. & O. R'y, and about forty men will be employed at once in the marble works about to be established. We understand that St. Charles iron mine is about to be opened, and that a large number of men are wanted to operate the same. This no doubt will have the effect of making things lively again.—Madoc Review.

A Boom in Mining.

BELLEVILLE, Ont., Aug. 6.—Mining operations in North Hastings are booming now. H. J. Ritchie, President of the Central Ontario railway, will open the Baker iron mine in a few days. J. B. McMillan, late superintendent of the same road, has bought a gold mine near Bannockburn, which he will operate at once. The ore will be sent to the crusher at Malone. The St. Charles mine is also to be opened at once.

Fatal Buggy Accident.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 6—Last night a freight train struck a buggy crossing the track at Prairie Park, near the city. The occupants of the carriage, Mrs. McNeil and her brother, John Shaw, were thrown out on the cowcatcher. Mrs. McNeil's head was mangled horribly and she died from her injuries, while Shaw escaped with slight injuries.

Drouth in Nova Scotia.

HALIFAX, N. S., Aug. 6.—The drouth is unprecedented. Rain has not fallen in many parts of the Province for ten weeks and the country is scorched up. In many places cattle are now being fed on hay. Rivers, streams and wells, which were never before known to be dry, are dry now. In Cape Breton the hay crop is the lightest ever known.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

THE BULGARIAN THRONE.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The reports announcing the departure of Prince Ferdinand for Bulgaria are untrue. He has so far hesitated to make his entry into the Bulgarian capital, in spite of the obvious wish of Austria that he should do so, and will probably not now venture to brave the wrath of the Czar by acting in opposition to the Russian Emperor's known wishes.

THE FISHERIES QUESTION.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—It is stated in Government circles that the negotiations with the Washington Government for the settlement of the Canadian fisheries dispute are progressing favorably, and no doubt is entertained that the difference will be speedily and satisfactorily adjusted.

AGAINST THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The Duke of Abercorn is out against the Irish land bill, which he regards as unwise and unjust.

CHAMBERLAIN AND ULSTER.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Mr. Chamberlain has announced his intention to invade Ulster at the beginning of October and has arranged to speak at Belfast on the 4th and in Coleraine on the 6th of that month. He is of course sure to meet with a welcome reception at both places, but exactly what good can result to the Unionist cause from his visit is not altogether plain. Nothing that can be said to an Ulster audience will add one vote to the Conservative or Unionist strength or win one from the Home Rule ranks.

THE LEAGUE.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The Daily News says the Parnellitiesunderstand that the Government before Parliament is prorogued will apply for sanction to proclaim particular branches of the National League.

SUPPRESSION OF THE LEAGUE.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Mr. Balfour created a considerable sensation in the House of Commons last night by fighting shy of the question put to the Government by Mr. Edmund Robertson, Gladstonian member for Dundee, when the Irish Executive would begin the work of suppressing the National League. The evasive reply of the Irish Secretary was received with cheers and laughter by the Parnellites, and the impression conveyed was that the Government entertained no definite intention of proceeding against the League. Thus far the operation of the Coercion Bill has resulted in no arrests, and in fact no particular inconvenience to anybody, and the present situation with regard to its enforcement cannot but be regarded, in view of the fierce talk of its partisans during the progress of the bill through the House, as extremely farcical.

A PROJECT FOR A SETTLEMENT.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Minister Phelps authorizes an absolute denial of the report published in English newspapers to the effect that he has informed Lord Salisbury of Secretary Bayard's acceptance of the proposals to temporarily renew the treaty of Washington with the exception of the provision for pecuniary compensation to Canada. Mr. Phelps' recent conference with Lord Salisbury on the fisheries question was devoted to the discussion of a project for the settlement of the dispute, and there is some chance for its acceptance by their respective governments, but the scheme does not imply a renewal of the Washington treaty.

RIOTING IN IRELAND.

BELFAST, Aug. 7.—A party of Nationalist members of the Order of Foresters went to Port Rush to-day in two special trains. They were met at Port Rush station by a crowd of Orangemen and a sharp fight ensued. Bottles and stones were used as missiles. The disturbance was finally quelled by the police.

While returning to Belfast the Nationalists were stoned all along the line by Orangemen who had been informed of the riot at Port Rush. The Nationalists replied with bottles and pistols.

MEETING OF THE EMPERORS.

GASTIEN, Aug. 6.—Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria arrived at Emperor William's residence at the Badeschloss to-day. After the Emperors had shaken hands and cordially embraced each other, they went to the reception room, where they were the recipients of hearty greeting from those there assembled. Both Emperors were in civil dress.

DYNAMITER MOONEY.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The police here claim that Mooney, who attempted to destroy the British steamer, The Queen of New York, is well known to them. According to their story Mooney, who was formerly known as "Moorehead," caused the explosion at the Glasgow gas works in 1882, when several of his accomplices were imprisoned, and was also concerned in the explosion at the Local Government and Times offices. For this latter outrage an accomplice named McDermott was imprisoned. Mooney then escaped to America, and subsequently attempted to blow up the Parliament buildings at Ottawa with dynamite. For this purpose he made use of funds which had been supplied to him by O'Donovan Rossa to be used in England. Mooney then got into hot water with the Canadian Fenians. Recently he has experimented with dynamite in New York. The blowing up of the Andre Statue, the police assert, was Mooney's work. They claim that he is affecting the insanity dodge.

PRECARIOUS SITUATION.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Advices from Suakim state that Ras Aloula, the Abyssinian Commander, has collected a force of 80,000 men which he intends to march against the Italian position at Massowah, beginning his campaign about the first of September. If the report be true the situation of the Italian troops in Abyssinia is extremely precarious since it would be impossible to reinforce Massowah between now and the time set for Ras Aloula's advance.

LINDSAY.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Last Saturday an elderly man, Hugh Moore, living in the East Ward, was thrown from his buggy at the corner of Queen and St. David streets, and sustained such injuries as produced death on Sunday night. It is not known how the horses became frightened, no one seeming to have seen him at the time. The funeral was on Tuesday afternoon.—Warder.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 6.—The supreme court of this state has decided that the anarchists must be hanged. The decision will not be officially promulgated until next month.

The Daily Review

MONDAY, AUGUST 8, 1887.

RECIPROCITY.

SOME of the Reform journals that are now advocating commercial union either do not know the difference between it and the reciprocity treaty formerly in force, or they wilfully try to mislead their readers. The leader of the party, however, acknowledges the great difference between the two. He unhesitatingly announces that he favors such reciprocal relations as formerly existed, but he sees great and perhaps insurmountable difficulties in the way of commercial union. The commercial annexationists should keep in view this difference, so clearly pointed out to them by the party leader.

Mr. Laurier was, however, neither fair nor consistent in his treatment of the position of the Conservative party towards reciprocity. He stated that the true sentiment of the Government was that we did not want to have anything to do with the United States, and that their policy was one of reprisals. Is that true, or did Mr. Laurier believe it to be true? The leaders of the Conservative party have stated their readiness to enter into a reciprocity treaty and their willingness to do so was shown indisputably by being made part of the tariff act of 1879. Mr. Laurier knew that an offer had been made to the United States to negotiate such a treaty and that the offer is still awaiting their acceptance. Indeed, the Reform leader himself bears testimony to the sincerity of the Government in regard to reciprocity. He said in this same speech:—

"Notwithstanding the entreaties and threats of Sir John the American people have the door shut against us."

That is emphatic language—too strong we believe—but how can Mr. Laurier say that Sir John Macdonald has tried by entreaties and threats to secure a reciprocity treaty, and at the same time state that Sir John is opposed to reciprocity? That the Government has begged for a renewal of the old treaty or blustered to secure it, would have to be proved before being believed, but it is known that only the consent of the United States is required to establish reciprocal trade on a fair basis.

Bear in mind, reciprocity and commercial union are different questions. Custom has made the mention of reciprocity bring to the mind of a Canadian the treaty that existed from 1854 to 1866, but the terms of that treaty should not be confounded with the proposals of the commercial unionists. A treaty or union that would be on the whole injurious to Canada it would be folly for this country to enter into, and the fact that such a union would discriminate against trade with the Mother Country does not make it more acceptable, but furnishes an additional reason for its rejection.

ALREADY dissatisfaction with Mr. Laurier as a leader is showing itself within the party. The Kingston Whig calls upon him to have definite ideas and to stick to them, and the Montreal Herald insinuates that the sooner the party supplies itself with a new leader the better. It says:—

"The Liberal party need, first an aggressive, original policy. Then they want an aggressive leader, another Mercier. And the sooner they supply themselves with these essentials the better."

Now, is this not hard on the leader? No doubt Mr. Laurier would adopt an original policy if he could find one that would be adopted by the people. But the Conservative party have satisfied the people by carrying out a policy adapted to the interests of the country, and opposition to their policy, even though in an original form, would not be successful.

THE Globe is of the opinion that "to enter into an Imperial Federation whose tariff would discriminate in favor of Canadian against American grain would probably be to become involved in a war of commercial reprisals with our nearest neighbor." And yet the Globe sees no reason why Canada should not enter into a commercial union "whose tariff" would discriminate in favor of United States against British trade. If a commercial arrangement between different parts of the same Empire which discriminates against a friendly foreign country would be considered an unfriendly act, in what light should an arrangement with the foreign country which discriminated against other parts of our Empire be viewed?

AN agricultural paper of Springfield, Mass., Farm and Home, recently asked its Canadian readers for their opinion regarding annexation. There were 910 answers received, 210 being in favor of and 700 against annexation. Of the answers sent in 680 were from Nova Scotia, the Province that Reform journals say is so discontented. Of this number 60 favored annexation and 620 were opposed to it.

SOUTH DOURO.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TWO HARVESTS IN ONE YEAR.—On August 5th, 1886, Mr. H. P. Crowley, of this place, commenced cutting his crop at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. This year he finished cutting his crop on August 5th, at twenty minutes to ten. He thus harvested two crops within the year.

PERSONAL.—Mr. J. R. Condon is engaged in perfecting his invention of an injector to take water from a well without a pump. By the 1st of October, he says he'll have it ready to draw the groodies out of the deepest well in the country. The new invention is confidently expected by the people here to revolutionise pump-making.

THE CROPS.—The wheat and barley crop is harvested. It is only just middling. Late oats and peas are expected to be better on account of the recent rains.

BURNING A FORTUNE.

Sixty Thousand Pounds Destroyed with a Trunk of Rubbish.

The following is absolutely true, though it sounds remarkably like fiction:—In Nottingham there lived an old couple, Mr. and Mrs. C—. They were exceedingly rich, and exceedingly close. Lately they both died, and the heirs hurried down to Nottingham to hunt up the good things which the miserly couple had been obliged to leave behind them in their journey to a better world, particularly the diamonds, a magnificent collection of which the late Mrs. C— had been known to possess. But, hunt as they would, nothing could they find. In their search, young Mrs. C—, however, discovered a lumber room and an old trunk, which, on being opened, was found to be full of old stays, dirty old curl papers, and a quantity of old hair combings. So exceedingly nasty was it all that she immediately ordered the contents to be turned out in the court yard and burnt, and even herself superintended the work of destruction, occasionally aiding it by flicking in stray pieces with the point of her parasol. In so doing, however, she noticed one of the curl papers slowly, through the action of the heat, uncurl itself, and to her horror discovered that it was a £50 note. I hear that £800 were saved, but it is estimated that nearly £36,000 have been destroyed. However, the diamonds still remained, and a diligent search was instituted for these. In the meantime, Mrs. C., junior, to remove from her husband's gaze the unpleasant heap of cinders that constantly reminded him of his loss, had called in the aid of the local dustman, who had carted them off without delay. At length an old woman in the neighboring workhouse was discovered who had formerly lived with the late Mr. and Mrs. C—, and on enquiring of her as to the diamonds, she immediately said "Oh, certainly; Mrs. Close had some beautiful diamonds; but much good they were to her, for she sewed them all up in their old stays!" Over £60,000 is said to have been thus burnt and thrown away.—Glasgow Herald.

EATS HIS WORDS.

Mr. Mowat has been associated with party leaders who have had no wish for handles to their names, but he has on other instances done the most unlikely things—doing in fact that which he said he would not—and another drop in expectations, in the way of personal gratification, need occasion no surprise.—Kingston Whig (Reform).

Give them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGAR

Without a word she rose, animated by the tragic agony of her purpose and the force of her despair, and glided toward the tent, the great knife in her hand. Now, ah! all too soon, she was inside of it and stood for a second to allow her eyes to grow accustomed to the light. Presently she began to see, first, the outline of the bed, then the outline of the manly form stretched upon it, then both bed and man distinctly. Jantje had said that he was sleeping like a child. He might have been, now he was not. On the contrary, his face was convulsed like that of one in an extremity of fear, and great beads of sweat stood upon his brow. It was as though he knew his danger, and was yet utterly powerless to avoid it. He lay upon his back. One heavy arm, his left, hung over the side of the bed, the knuckles of the hand resting on the ground; the other was thrown back and his head was pillowed upon it. The clothing had fallen back from his throat and massive chest, which were quite bare.

Jess stood and gazed. "For Bessie's sake, for Bessie's sake!" she murmured, and then, impelled by a force that seemed to move of itself, she crept slowly, slowly, to the right hand side of the bed.

At this moment the man woke, and his opening eyes fell full upon her face. Whatever his dream had been, what he now saw was far more terrible, for bending over him was the ghost of the woman he had murdered in the Vaal! There she was, risen from her river grave, torn, dishevelled, water yet dripping from her hands and hair. Those sunk and marble cheeks, those dreadful flaming eyes could belong to no human being, but only to a spirit. It was the spirit of Jess Croft, the woman he had murdered, come back to tell him that there was a living vengeance and a hell! Their eyes met, and no creature will ever know the agony of terror that he tasted of before the end came. She saw his face sink in and turn ashen gray, while the cold sweat ran from every pore. He was awake, but fear paralyzed him, he could not speak or move.

He was awake, and she could hesitate no more.

He must have seen the flash of the falling steel, and——

She was outside the tent again, the red knife in her hand. She flung the accursed thing from her. That shriek must have awakened every soul within a mile. Already she could faintly hear the stir of men down by the wagon and the patter of Jantje running for his life.

Then she too turned and fled straight up the hill. She knew not whither, she cared not where. None saw her or followed her, the hunt had broken away to the left after Jantje. Her heart was lead and her head a rocking sea of fire, while before her, around her, and behind her yelled all the conscience created furies that run murder to his lair.

On she flew, one sight only before her eyes, one sound only in her ears. On over the hill, far into the rain and night.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

TANTA COETZEE TO THE RESCUE.

After Jess had been set free by the Boers outside Hans Coetzee's place, John was sharply ordered to dismount and offsaddle his horse. This he did with the best grace that he could muster, and the horse was knee haltered and let loose to feed. It was then indicated to him that he was to enter the house, which he also did, closely attended by two of the Boers.

"Are you hungry, rooibaaje?" asked one in English.

John answered that he was.

"Tie his hands behind him, and let us see if he can catch in his mouth, like a dog," suggested one of the gentle youths.

"No, no; make him eat pap with a wooden spoon, like a Kaffir," said another. I will feed him if you have a very long spoon."

Here again was legitimate cause for merriment, but in the end matters were compromised by a lump of biltong and a piece of bread being thrown to him from the other end of the room. He caught them and proceeded to eat, trying to conceal his ravenous hunger as much as possible from the circle of onlookers who clustered round to watch the operation.

Suddenly one of the men remembered about the young fellow whom he had thrown backward off the horse and who was lying very sick in the next room, and suggested that measures of retaliation should be taken, which would undoubtedly have been done had not the elderly Boer who had commanded the party interposed. This man was getting drunk like the others, but fortunately for John he got amiably drunk.

"Let him alone," he said, "let him alone. We will send him to the commandant to-morrow. Frank Muller will know how to deal with him."

John thought to himself that he certainly would.

"Now, for myself," the man went on with a hiccough, "I bear no malice. We have thrashed the British and they have given up the country, so let bygones be bygones, I say. Almighty, yes! I am not proud, not I. If an Englishman takes off his hat to me I shall acknowledge it."

This stayed the fellows off for a while, but presently John's protector went away, and then the others began to get playful. They got their rifles and amused themselves with leveling them at him, and making sham bets as to where they would hit him. John, seeing the emergency, backed his chair well into the corner of the wall and drew his revolver, which fortunately for himself he still had.

"If any man interferes with me, by God, I'll shoot him!" he said, in good English, which they did not fail to understand. Undoubtedly as the evening went on it was only the possession of this revolver and his evident determination to use it that saved his life.

At last things got very bad indeed, so bad that he found it absolutely necessary to keep his eyes continually fixed, now on one and now on another, to prevent their putting a bullet through him unawares. He had twice appealed to the old woman, Hans Coetzee's wife, but she sat in her big chair with a sweet smile upon her fat face and refused to interfere. It is not every day that one gets the chance of seeing a real live English rooibaatje baited like an ant bear on the flat.

Presently, just as John in desperation was making up his mind to begin shooting right and left, the old woman, seeing that matters were getting beyond a joke, came waddling down the room with marvelous activity and threw herself between them.

LINES OF SYMPATHY

To Mrs. Thomson, widow of the late Robert H. Thomson, Esq., 22 Seeley avenue, Chicago, Ill., the same gentleman whose name is coupled with the St. Andrew's Society in Peterborough in the dedication of my book of poems, shortly to be issued from the press.

Relentless death! How cruel thou must be;
Pity or mercy are unknown to thee;
The dearest ties that blood or love entwine
Are quickly severed by that hand of thine.
The widow's tears, her anguished, aching heart,
Can't stay thy stroke, or thy dread blow avert.
In vain she strives her husband's life to hold,
Thy ruthless hand soon lays that loved one cold;
Your dreaded hand brought anguish and despair
Into the quiet home of that aged pair,
Slaying that husband—who for thirty years
Was her chief comfort in her joy or tears.
Remorseless death! How could you take away
That loving husband, her delight and stay,
Leaving her friendless in declining years
To sit and shed the widow's bitter tears.

Dear madam, it would ill become my part
To prob afresh that deep wound in your heart,
Or fan grief's embers, smouldering in your breast,
For him you loved, now in his grave at rest;
No words of mine, no sympathy most dear,
Can ease one sigh, or check the rising tear;
No earthly friend can ease your grief or pain,
Nor bring your loved one back to life again.
I know your thoughts, but sadly fail to claim
The power or language to express the same.
Awake or sleeping, troubled fancies stray
Back to the pleasures of your wedded days;
His loved-tuned friendship words your heart to cheer,
Their lingering sound still murmurs in your ear;
His noble soul, his love, his acts, impart
An undying impress on your sorrowing heart.

When mirth and joy rang in your happy home
His merry laugh back to your mind will come;
Or when affliction seized your frame or mind
His words and hands so gentle, helping, kind.
You now partake your morning meal alone,
Your table partner and his talk are gone.
How long the day seems, which once gave delight
Rejoicing, waiting his return at night.
You watch the clock at six, with tear-dimmed eye,
Listening for footsteps but they all pass by;
The tea prepared, his evening slippers there
Wait not for him, set past his empty chair.
Your separation, grieved one, can't be long,
Near eighty years you have joined earth's busy throng.
Since God has taken your loved one away
His heavenly arm will be your shield and stay;
Look not on earth for solace for your grief,
Trust not in friends, they cannot give relief,
The only balm to mitigate your loss
Flows from the cross-beams of the bloody cross.

I knew your husband only through his pen
But found him one of earth's most noblest men;
Five years experience bound us to each other,
Feel his loss as keenly as a brother.
Our correspondence on this earth must end,
Cold, stiff and lifeless, lies his ready hand,
His heart, the mainspring of his manly love,
Paralized by death, refuses now to move.
No more the mail will weekly bring to me
Letters of friendship from his heart so free;
His sudden, sad and unexpected end
Deprives me of a true well-wishing friend.

Cold is the grave that holds him,
Cold now his heart and hand,
While on earth no heart beat warmer
As a husband and a friend.

William Telford,

Smith, August 5th, 1887.

FROM ALL OVER.

The New York Republicans have set the date of their convention for Sept. 14.

Chicago, on the basis of the directory just issued, claims a population of 800,000.

The storm of Friday did considerable damage in various parts of the country.

The Dominion Rifle Association's competitions will take place on Aug. 20th at Ottawa.

Over 1,000 men have been thrown out of employment by the fire in the Calumet and Hecla mine in Michigan.

Headache, Billiousness, Dyspepsia and Indigestion relieved and at once by Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. Try it. Samples free.

The Mediterranean ports have established quarantine against arrivals from Malta owing to the prevalence of cholera there.

The laying of the double track on the Grand Trunk railway between Toronto and Montreal is being rapidly pushed forward.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It will do you good. Sold by all druggists. 50c.

It is reported that a number of leading disciples of the Mormon Church will shortly make a trip over the Canadian Pacific railway to ascertain the resources of the country.

During the past seven days there have been 163 failures in the United States and 20 in Canada, making a total of 183, as against 184 last week and 154 for the corresponding week of last year.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives, such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

No overtures have yet been made to the Dominion Government for the extradition of McGarigle, the Chicago boodler. The question will first have to be considered by the provincial authorities.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

SQUINTING THAT WAY.

All that can be inferred from Mr. Laurier's first speech since he assumed the leadership of is that he is squinting in the direction of Commercial Union, but hesitates to admit it.—Toronto Telegram (Indep.)

SQINTING ROTH WAYS.

This aimless squinting both ways for success is what so often causes the Liberal party to tumble into the ditch, prone at the bottom of which it now lies, and without a leader daring enough to frankly state a bold method of lifting it out. No wonder that thousands of the party rank and file are disgusted and indifferent.—Toronto World.

DISALLOWANCE NECESSARY.

Disallowance is necessary in the commercial interests of the Eastern Provinces and the Dominion generally, if we are not to surrender our North-West territory to be dominated by foreign railway and commercial influences.—Montreal Herald (Ref.

VAGUE AND UNCERTAIN.

While every credit is to be given to Mr. Laurier for caution and sincerity we cannot help remarking that his colorless speech is too much in keeping with those of other Liberal leaders in the past. It announces no positive policy for the part. It is vague and uncertain and proposes nothing new. It contains no platform on which the party can rally. It might have proceeded from a Tory as readily as from a Liberal. It gives the party no cry. So far from stimulating party activity, it will have the reverse effect. It is a sort of wet blanket cast over party action. It is a policy of this kind that has kept the Liberal party where it is. —Montreal Herald (Reform.)

Poverty and Distress.

That poverty which produces the greatest distress is not of the purse but of the blood. Deprived of its richness it becomes scant and watery, a condition termed anæmia in medical writings. Given this condition, and scrofulous swellings and sores, general and nervous debility, loss of flesh and appetite, weak lungs, throat disease, spitting of blood and consumption, are among the common results. If you are a sufferer from thin, poor blood employ Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which enriches the blood and cures these grave affections. Is more nutritive than cod liver oil, and is harmless in any condition of the system, yet powerful to cure. By druggists.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

The Daily Review.

MONDAY, AUGUST 8, 1887.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

The Ladies.

The ladies who are to assist in the Charlotte street rink dining room will meet at the rink this evening.

Decorate.

The merchants are requested by the Oddfellows to decorate their places of business this evening. Let the town look its best.

Y. M. C. A. Male Choir.

All members of the above choir are requested to meet in the rooms of the Association to-night at 8 o'clock. Mr. Seward will be present.

Sudden Death.

Mr. Williams, druggist, of Norwood, died very suddenly in that village on Saturday morning. He retired to bed on Friday night apparently well, but expired about four o'clock in the morning. The cause of death was paralysis.

Free to the Ladies.

Arrangements have been made by which ladies will be admitted free to the grand stands on the P. A. A. grounds on the occasion of the grand concerts given there on the evenings of the 9th and 10th inst by the band of the Victoria Rifles, Montreal. Gentlemen's tickets to the grand stand will be 20 cents.

Scott Act Inspectors.

The Toronto Mail says:—"The Peterborough County Council has petitioned the Ontario Government to increase the salaries of Scott Act inspectors so that they may devote more time to their work." It was a meeting of temperance workers that passed the resolution, not the County Council.

No More a Daily.

The Cobourg World appears no longer as as daily paper. Four months ago the daily edition of the World was commenced, but t has been found unprofitable and has been discontinued. The Sentinel-Star, also, which bloomed into a daily about the same time, will in future confine itself to a weekly edition.

Correction.

The Peterborough Central Exhibition prize list, page 25, class 26, section 1, 2nd prize, "plush table cover, valued at $4.00," should read presented by Thomas Kelly, Esq., merchant. The prize presented by R. Fair, Esq., merchant, viz., millinery goods, valued at $5.00, is to be applied to a special prize in class 37, section 35, for the best display of ladies' domestic work.

Precipitated.

On Saturday night two young men were driving down George street at a good pace. On nearing the intersection of Hunter street the horse got away from them, ran over the sidewalk, nearly dashed against the plate glass front in Mercer & Co's clothing store, broke the shafts, and left the two in the buggy entangled in the buggy top. There were no injuries except the breaking of the shafts.

H. S. GRIFFIN & Co. are clearing out a line of corsets at 25 cents, sun hats worth 35 cents for 15 cents. Parasols, hosiery and gloves at great reductions. 2d32w31

Scott Act.

Mr. Edmison, County Police Magistrate, held a session of the Police Court in Ashburnham on Saturday. Three Scott Act cases, Queen vs. Calcutt, Queen vs. Ray and Queen vs. Henderson, were all disposed of, fines of $50 and costs ceing imposed in each. Henry Tyler was to have been brought before the court on a similar charge, but he left town before the summons was served.

Steamer Golden Eye.

The Steamer Golden Eye will leave Peterborough on Tuesday at 2 p. m., Wednesday at 4 p. m., Thursday at 8 a. m. Picnic parties can leave on Tuesday and return Wednesday morning or evening or wait over till Thursday, which will give them an opportunity for one or two days good fishing on the river or lake. Return tickets 50 cents. 2d32

A. F. & A. M.

An emergent meeting of Peterborough Lodge No 158 A. F. & A. M. will be held in the Masonic Hall on Tuesday, the 9th inst., at 2.15 p. m. for the purpose of attending the funeral of our late Bro. John Stewart. Members of sister lodges are cordially invited to attend. An informal meeting of the above named Lodge will be held this evening at 7.30. p. m. By order of the W. M.

CHILDREN'S Boots, Shoes and Slippers in endless variety and at very low prices, at KIDD'S.

Obituary.

Mr. John Stewart, for many years sexton of St. Paul's Church, died this morning at three o'clock. His sickness was of short duration. About three weeks ago his digestion became bad and since then he was unable to get anything to remain on his stomach. The severe vomiting fits, and the absence of nutrition, told upon his strength till he at last succumbed. The people of St. Paul's will miss him greatly, as he has been regularly on duty as sexton for many years. He was a Scotchman by birth, and in politics a Reformer.

The importance of the Oddfellows' Demonstration will be recognised by the REVIEW, which, during the next four days, will be issued as a six-page, 42 column paper. Everybody should secure a copy of it on these evenings.

THE EVE.

The Great Demonstration Begins To-morrow.

Though the Grand Encampment representatives are not due in Peterborough till this evening several have already arrived and taken up their quarters at the hotels. The general influx of the representatives will take place this evening.

In the morning the celebrated band of the Victoria Rifles, Montreal, will arrive in town and will be escorted to the Charlotte street rink where breakfast will be served. At 9 o'clock they will escort the Grand Encampment representatives to the Court House where they will hold session. Bro. R. W. Bell will deliver the address of welcome on behalf of the Patriarchs of Peterborough.

To-morrow evening the Grand Lodge representatives will reach town and the grand promenade concert in the P. A. A. A. grounds will open at 8 o'clock.

At 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning the Grand Lodge will go into session. Bro Stratton, M. P. P., P. G., will welcome them, on behalf of the Oddfellows of the town and Bro. Stevenson, M. P., P. G., will deliver the address of welcome on behalf of the citizens.

The sports in the Driving Park promise to be the most brilliant event that has ever been seen in Peterborough. At half past one o'clock the procession consisting of the uniquely uniformed Cantons, the Lieut-General, Lieut-Colonels, Captains, the Grand Lodge Representatives, and numerous bands will parade to the park. During the afternoon, evolutions in which the Cantons will exhibit their wonderful drill will be gone through. Also horse races, foot races, etc. In the trotting race there are 9 entries: "Park" owned by A. G. Brown, Toronto; "Nellie Wood" owned by A. W. Hatman, Toronto; "Valentine" owned by George Curtis, Lindsay; "Dan O'Connell" owned by Geo, Briggs, Toronto; "Mayflower" owned by T. W. McCrae, Beaverton; "Black Diamond" owned by Wm. McCrae, Beaverton and the three local trotters, Royal Jim Fanny B. and Little Ned.

The Charlotte street rink has been elegantly decorated and fitted up for the use of the Cantons. In addition to the rink the old Music Hall will be utilized for sleeping apartments, and also the Fire Hall.

The flags for presentation to the Cantons have all arrived and are very handsome.

A telephone is being placed in the rink this afternoon for the use of the Cantons and others.

This afternoon the quarters for the officers and press representatives are being fitted up in the Charlotte street rink.

THRILLING ADVENTURE.

Hand to Hand Encounter With a Wild Animal.

One of the most thrilling adventures for some years occurred at Stoney Lake on Sunday evening.

Mr. Alex. Elliott and T. Dunn were taking a short cut through the woods to attend the A. C. A. camp service. Suddenly just before them an animal jumped up and fled for safety up a tree. It had the appearance of a young bear. The spirit of adventure at once showed itself. Mr. Elliott was about to climb the tree, but Mr. Dunn, being more agile, prepared to ascend instead. Sam Fitz, and some more of the boys that were following, were sent back to camp for guns, but the gentleman chosen to ascend the tree was so eager to close with the animal that he borrowed Mr. Elliott's big jack knife and started up. He made good progress up and was soon lost in the branches.

After a few minutes had elapsed a whirring sound was heard, and Mr. Dunn retreated down the tree hastily. "Great Scott!" said he, "its a porcupine," and it was a porcupine. It was found that the quills had been imbedded in his shirt front, and it was with difficulty that they were extracted.

The ladies felt quite anxious as to Mr. Dunn's injuries, but their fears were soon dispelled when it was found that he had come of comparatively unhurt.

A. C. A. CAMP.

The Annual Meeting of the Northern Division at Stoney Lake.

A. C. A CAMP, JUNIPER ISLAND, Aug. 5.—A thunder storm, with very heavy rain and shifting winds, sometimes amounting to a gale, effectually prevented the review of the canoe fleet, the illuminated parade, and a proposed extra paddling race for a beautiful flag presented by Mrs. R. Lundy.

This morning the weather is lovely, with a good breeze from the northwest and a bright sky, so that the postponed events and the first races of the regatta will be able to come off.

Among the arrivals was Mr. Bewell, of the Ubiques, and more members are expected to-day with Commodore Wilkin.

Personal.

His Honor Judge Dartnell, of Whitby, is in town en route to Stoney Lake. He is the guest of Mr. C. H. Clementi.

Mr. W. Nicholson, of Toronto, formerly of Peterborough, is back to town on a short visit. He is looking well.

Sergt.-Gen. Underwood and staff will arrive in town to-morrow.

Second Class Examinations.

The result of the second class non-professional examination has been published. The following, who studied in the Peterborough Collegiate Institute were successful:—J. Geary, M. O'Connell, H. Milne, L. Kennaird and L. Udy.

NO. TWO.

Another Sad Drowning Accident at Stoney Lake.

On Sunday evening, just as the tourists at Stoney Lake were assembling at the A. C. A. Island for divine service, the people were struck with consternation at the report that a young man had been drowned only a short distance away.

Thomas Starr, only son of Mr. Jas. Starr, of Norwood, drove to the Lake on Sunday morning. He was visiting friends near Eagle Mount. In the evening himself and a friend started off in a canoe to pay a visit to Boshink. When only a few yards from shore, young Starr's paddle turned in his hand and the canoe tipped over. Starr shouted that he was all right; that he would catch the canoe. But when his friend rose from the water and grasped the canoe he could see Starr nowhere.

Though diligent search was made for the body, it had not been found this morning.

Y. M. C. A. Building.

There is some movement in Young Men's Christian Association circles regarding the purchase of a lot, and the erection of a building, for want of which the Association is greatly hampered in its work. In this connection the following lines, containing the views of a prominent Association man in the United States, will be timely:

Buy a lot. No Association will be regarded by the Christian or business public, as a permanent fixture, an institution of their pride, and foster care, until it has a home of its own.

It can never do its work at the most convenience, or at the best expenditure of time and money till it owns and occupy a home of its own.

It can never provide the best attractions and helps to young men except in a building constructed for the purpose.

Looking to this happy consummation of hopes EVERY association should seek immediately to secure sufficient funds with which to purchase a lot upon which to erect a home for itself and the young men of the town.

The building may be delayed till the lot is paid for and the funds secured for that purpose.

In the meantime the lot has increased in value and become more desirable. If the purchase of the lot be delayed, the most desirable lots will either be all occupied, or will have increased in value so as to be beyond the reach of the Association in five years.

Not a few Associations in the land to-day are rejoicing in the good judgment which purchased a lot for them years ago. Others are mourning over the penny wise policy of their directors which decided against the purchase of a coveted lot, which now is, in price, far beyond their reach. Business men will readily see the force of the claim of the Association and give money for this object.

All the boys in town are wanted to sell the enlarged DAILY REVIEW to-morrow evening and the three succeeding evenings. It will sell fast. Apply at the REVIEW at 4 o'clock to-morrow evening.

Camping Out.

Camping out is becoming more popular every year, and, from being a mere freak on the part of the hardy youths with a taste for rowing and fishing, it is now recognized as a delightful break in the monotony of a heated and blighted existence by men of mature years and young ladies whose tastes run to the pastoral. It is well known that one of the chief causes of failure of the vital powers in the heated season is the inability to get sleep at night. The more densely populated the city, the greater the difficulty. But the men and women who take to their tents in the July days enjoy cool breezes at night, and naught disturbs them save the hum of the mosquito, thirsting vainly for their blood, while circling round the protecting net. The old-stagers aver that the coolest resting place conceivable is a plank stretched across the seats of a boat, moored beneath a bridge, but the tenter regards his little canvas home as a fair and square compromise with civilization. He delights to tantalize his city friends with accounts of his sempiternal coolness and neatness; the charms of sunsets in the rock-ribbed valleys, and the delights of a dreamless sleep. Camping out has many advantages. It is inexpensive; it is eminently healthful, and it conduces to habits of independence that are becoming only too rare in an age of Capuan sloth and luxurious self-indulgence.—Baltimore Herald.

At the meeting of the general committee of both Houses of the State-directed colonization scheme, it was proposed to lay the proposals as drafted out before the country during the recess and to urge them upon the Government at the next session.

MR. LAURIER'S "FACTS."

He (Mr. Laurier) states, as a matter of fact, that New Brunswick wishes to withdraw from the Confederation, which is the first intimation of the kind that we have heard. We don't think there is a member of Parliament from New Brunswick who will say so much. Mr. Laurier's information also led him to say that not only New Brunswick, but the people of all of the three Maritime Provinces wish to leave the Confederation. This is much further than there can possibly be any warrant for. The result of the late general elections to the Commons ought to have cast some light upon the real attitude of Nova Scotians on the question of secession, however much may it have been misunderstood previously.—Montreal Herald (Reform)

Consumption Can be Cured

By proper, healthful exercise, and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, which contains the healing and strengthening virtues of these two valuable specifics in their fullest form. Dr. D. D. McDonald, Pictou, N.S., says: "I have been prescribing Scott's Emulsion with good results. It is especially useful in persons with consumptive tendencies." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

VISITING ODDFELLOWS.

THE GRAND ENCAMPMENT REPRESENTATIVES ARRIVE.

List of Delegates—The Montreal Canton and the Victoria Rifles Band—Others Coming.

The first of the four days on which the representatives of the Grand Encampment and Grand Lodge of Oddfellows for Ontario will visit town opened auspiciously. The weather could not have been finer. The representatives to the Grand Encampment commenced to arrive on Monday and all were here by this morning.

The first canton to arrive was Canton Montreal. The morning train over the Canadian Pacific railway brought them and the magnificent band of the Victoria Rifles to town. They were met at the depot by the Fire Brigade Band and local brethren and escorted to their quarters at the Charlotte street rink.

The streets presented a creditable appearance. The arches at the market and across George street south of Hunter, were neatly trimmed. The arch at the corner of George and Sherbrook streets was also much admired. George street was brilliant with bunting suitable to the occ.

At 9 o'clock the Victoria Rifles and 57th Battalion bands, escorted the representatives of the Grand Encampment to the Court House and then returned to the rink. The representatives present were as follows.

The chevaliers were welcomed by R. W. Bell, P. C. P., who delivered a short address before the Encampment went into session. He cordially welcomed them to Peterborough and hoped they would enjoy their visit. He referred to Peterborough as one of the most progressive places in the Province, and facetiously intimated that this would be a good place to stay altogether.

The Grand Chief Patriarch, F. Riddel, London, returned thanks. He was much pleased with the appearance of Peterborough, and was sure that their stay here would be an enjoyable one. He also returned thanks to those in charge for providing such a commodious hall to hold their meetings in.

The Grand Officers present were:—Frank Riddell, Grand Patriarch; John Sinclair, Grand High Priest; Abner Fraser, Grand Senior Warden; M. D. Dawson, Grand Scribe; Ed. Beltz, Grand Treasurer; Jos. Oliver and John Welsh, Grand Representatives to Sovereign Grand Lodge; D. H. Moore, Grand Junior Warden; John A. Macdonald, Grand Marshall; W. Wright, Grand Sentinel; W. Robinson, Grand O. Sentinel.

The report of the auditors state that the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were correct, and show a considerable increase in both membership and finances.

The following compose the Standing Committees, viz:—

DESTRIBUTION.—Jos. Oliver, John Reid, Theo. Parnell, Geo. Ross and Wm. Fletcher.

FINANCE.—Francis Rae, Jno. J. Reid, A. McGregor, A. C. Size and W. D. Laurie.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE GRAND PATRIARCH.

The Grand Patriarch presented his report as follows:—

To the Officers and Members of the Grand Encampment, I.O.O.F., of Ontario:

PATRIARCHS,—From the west we have travelled eastward since last we met, and our march has been one of progress. The town of Peterborough whose hospitality we enjoy to-day, we trust will be benefitted by our labors, and this section of our jurisdiction receive an impulse which will tell in the coming year.

The Good Shepherd has watched over and protected us, and by His permission we are assembled in our fold again to express our gratitude for past mercies and ask wisdom for our future guidance. May our counsels receive His divine sanction, and the prosperity which has followed us thus far, be continued, if not increased, in years to come.

In placing before you, for consideration, my official acts since last session, I may express my appreciation of the honor you then conferred upon me, and assure you, though great has been the responsibility, I have endeavored to do my duty in every instance to the best of my judgment. Any errors or omissions I leave to the kind forbearance of my Brethern.

PATRIARCHS. I extend to you individually the right hand of fellowship and bespeak for you, during our discussions, the best of good nature and regard for each other, that our united efforts may be productive of the greatest possible good in the limited time at our disposal.

He went on to say that three new encampments had been organized during the year and went into details as to their organization.

He reported as net gain in membership of over two hundred during the passed year, and presented correspondence from all over the province showing the condition in which the order was in these places

He then went into a great deal of business interesting to the members of the order only.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE GRAND SCRIBE.

The Grand Scribe presented his report as follows:—

To the Officers and Members of the Grand Encampment of Ontario:

PATRIARCHS,—No more fitting place could have been selected than the ancient but beautiful town of Peterborough, for our annual gathering. Long before this Branch of our Order had any existance in Ontario, an Encampment of Patriarchs had a Tent erected here and flourished for many years, but hard times came upon them, and like the red man of the forest, their fire was quenched—they went out of existance. Still the memories of the past were upon them, and when some of the old Patriarchs made an application for the erection of a new Encampment under the Independent Order, they insisted that the old and venerable name, Mount Hebron, should be given uhem. Their wish was complied with, and about the beginning of November, 1883, a start was made. They promised then that their progress would be "onward," and faithfully they have kept their word, for from that time to the present every single Return has reported an increase in membership and interest. We are glad to assemble and partake of their generous hospitality on the banks of the Otonabee, and take a view of the numerous lakes which are said to abound in the county of Peterborough. We know that the town has an extended fame for its hospitality, and the members of the Order for more than six months past have been moving heaven and earth to give the Representatives a welcome that they will not forget. We accept the welcome in the same generous spirit in which it is given, and trust that its pulsations may be felt throughout the whole Order.

Further on in the report was a tabular statement in detail, showing that the revenue of the Encampment branch of the order was $4,373.85 for the last year, and that the cash in hand and invested was $27,-085.34.

GRAND TREASURERS REPORT.

The Grand Treasurer presented his report showing that a substantial balance was held in hand.

The Encampment adjourned to meet at two o'clock.

TRADE WITH JAPAN.

Developed by the Canadian Pacific Steamship Route.

MONTREAL, Aug. 8.—A party of Japanese merchants from Yokohama arrived in this city Saturday. They say the opening of the C P. R. brings out a large trade from Japan, particularly in silks. They have made every arrangement for establishing agencies here, and on their return will get up a trade petition to the government asking that a Japanese consul-general be established in Montreal with vice consuls at Victoria and Vancouver.

CHAMPIONSHIP OF AMERICA.

The Coming Race Between John Teemer and Edward Hanlan.

TORONTO, Aug 8.—John Teemer, the oarsman, will arrive to-day from Boston to go into training for his race with Hanlan on Saturday next for the championship of America. Albert Hamm, who accompainies Teemer, will look after his preparations for the race. Hanlan has ordered two new boats, one from Blaikie, the Boston builder, and the other from Warin, of this city. He is taking two spins daily, one of six miles in the morning and one in the afternoon over the course upon which the race is to be rowed. He also takes pedestrain exercise, walking from four to eight miles. He looks well and says he is feeling well. Hanlan will probably be unaccompained on his journey to Australia. He says he is furnishing the bulk of his stake money in his forth-coming race with Beach, and can look out for his interests himself.

COAL AT CAMPBELLFORD.

Alleged Discovery of Anthracite of a Good Quality.

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug 6.—A wonderful discovery of anthracite coal has been made on the property of a farmer named Nix living about nine miles east of Campbellford. The quality is of the best, having been tested by an expert chemist in Toronto, and the indications af a large seam are good. The proximity of this bed of coal to the iron beds is of the greatest importance to the country. Experienced miners from Pennsylvania are expected here in a few days, when further developments are expected. Samples were found by Mr. Nix some years ago, but he paid no attention to the matter until Dr. McCrae, of Campbellford, interested himself in the case. The spring from which the samples were taken has been closed four days, and only opened for testing purposes. The sand carried out of the spring contains numerous pieces of coal, and there seems to be no doubt of the genuineness of the discovery.

FIVE PERSONS DROWNED.

Three Young Men and a Mother and her Child Perish in the Water.

MONTREAL, Aug. 9.—On Saturday afternoon three young men, who accompained a picnic excursion to the Back River, were drowned. A young man named Julien went into the river to bathe. Being watched for some time, he was seen swimming about, when suddenly he approached a rapid and disappeared. Two young men,—named Alfred Roy, nephew of Ex-Ald. Roy, and Treffle Tailleur,—at once jumped into the water and attempted a rescue. Not knowing how to swim they soon became victims of their own generosity and imprudence, and were carried away and disappeared in the current. The bodies of Roy and Tailleur were recovered.

Yesterday morning, at St. Helen's Island, Mrs. Brennan and her child, a son aged ten years, were drowned. The boy went into bathe and was swept away by the strong current. The mother jumped in to save him, but met her own death. Mrs. Brennan's body was recovered.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

A Dane Falls Into the Burleigh Lock Pit.

A serious accident occurred at the Burleigh works on Monday morning.

A Danish employee was engaged in wheeling cement from one side of the locks to the other. The track-way was made of plank, but by some means it got disarranged and a man was sent to fix it. In the meantime the Dane came along and, it seemed to him to be unsafe, he stepped out to try it. He made two or three steps outward when all at once it gave way and he fell a few feet. Had he been quick enough his injuries would have been nothing, but he rolled over the lip of the lock-pit and fell twenty feet to the hard plank bottom.

He was picked up and Dr. Bell of Lakefield was sent for. His injuries were found to be severe. His right leg was broken and the left knee cap fractured. His face was badly cut and his body was covered with bruises.

Every possible attention was shown to the unfortunate man. Mr. Timbers, the paymaster, arranged as easy quarters as possible on the boat, and he was brought by train from Lakefield to-day to the Nicholls Hospital.

Personal.

Mr. E. W. King, of the Barrie Gazette, is a delegate to the Grand Encampment of Oddfellows now in session.

Lieut.-Gen. Underwood, of Kentucky, and staff, arrived in town at noon to-day. He was heartily welcomed at the station, the Victoria Rifles' Band playing "Yankee Doodle."

A Queen's "Black Art."

The only person who in any way can boast of ever having been initiated by the late magician, Hermann, into some of the mysteries of his profession, is none other than the queen of the Belgians, to whom he taught privately a few of his wonderful legerdemain performances during a brief season at Ostend, and who occasionally deigns to amuse her intimates with an exhibition of her remarkable talent for the "black art."—Home Journal.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

MOVEMENTS OF GERMAN TROOPS.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—The Temps notes with great concern the movement of German troops on the Belgian frontier. At Valheim the Germans have built an emissaire for twent-six transportation trains, and from other sources it learned that the Germans are strengthening themselves in the most remarkable way along the Belgian frontiers.

THE WHEAT FIELDS OF INDIA.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Mr. Smeaton, director of agriculture of the northwest provinces of India, has issued a note on the competition between India and American wheat. He says India possesses means to compel America to withdraw her hostile tariffs and open her markets to British industry, but is burdened by higher railway freight charges, excessive handling and apparently (though not really) inferior quality. He advises London merchants to use their influence with the railway.

HEAVY ROBBERY.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—Madam Miolan, a former queen of operetta, while travelling in a coach with two attendants, had a valise containing valuables said to be worth $100,000 stolen. Madame Miolan had left the coach temporarily in order to relieve the horses while going up a hill, and during her absence the valise disappeared. A male attendant named Anda has been arrested on suspicion.

THE POPE'S JUBILEE

LIMERICK, Aug. 8.—A magnificent religious ceremonial took place here yesterday in honor of the Pope's Jubilee. Deputations were present from all parts of Ireland. Several bishops, hundreds of priests and 20,000 men were in the procession, carrying 500 banners. The streets were spanned with triumphal arches, the houses were hung with evergreens, banners and papal colors, while altars were erected in the streets.

Struck by a Cyclone.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.—Additional advices from Millbrook, Kansas, struck by a cyclone last Thursday, say the place was practically demolished, seventy-nine buildings, including hotels, school houses, churches, stores and residences being wholly or partly destroyed. The losses foot up heavily and people are in great distress.

Horsfords Acid Phosphate.

IN DIGESTIVE DISEASES.

Dr. E. V. Wright, Saratoga Springs, New York, says: "I have used it for years, and my experience has proved beyond question that the peculiar combination of phosphates renders it most valuable in the treatment of digestive disorders."

NEW JERSEY SAND.

Its Transmutation Into California Gold at the "Long Branch."

After the war of 1861 was over these peaceful villagers, who, having contributed their part toward it, were just settling down again for another fifty years' nap, were awakened again by certain capitalists, who bought up all the cheap land they could find within sight, smell or sound of the ocean, and proceeded to invest money in it. One old school speakers contained an affecting poem about little Alfred, or Charley, or some similarly named child, who found a shilling coming home from school one day, and exclaimed, "I'll have a fortune, for I'll plant it right away." These capitalists imitated little Alfred or Charley, with much better luck. They planted not a shilling, but thousands of dollars here in the sand; they seeded these acres of the shore with more money than Capt. Kidd has ever been proved to have buried anywhere, and they finally have harvested a large area of golden financial wheat.

One of their first shrewd methods of tillage was to make their new, straggling, one streeted town the summer capital of the United States. They built a miniature White House near the edge of the sea and invited President Grant to live there two months in the year. He came, with that simplicity of greatness which never enjoys pleasure any the less because it happens to be a source of profit to others. The "long branch" of Shrewsbury river, which gave name to the whole locality because it had its arm half way round the older town, leaped in one season into world wide fame.

The old war chief of a hemisphere settled down here with as little ostentation as he now rests in Riverside park; but there were plenty of commonplace people, with commonplace wealth, willing to furnish all the style necessary for such a village, and to see that the new town was well painted with gorgeous colors. Many of the dollars that had been planted in the pulverized gravel of the shore grew into gold bearing roof trees. The cities brought here their hotel luxuries for sale; money drawers were opened wide for summer snow storms of bank notes, and fortunes were made here between spring and autumn. Hundreds of acres of New Jersey sand had been transmuted into California gold.—Will Carlton in New York Star.

The Boston Mending Bureau.

The Boston Mending Bureau and Laundry company is a new thing in our city, though a similar establishment has been in successful operation in New York for some time. The plan of work and object can be told in a few words, and the whole thing is so extremely sensible and feasible that the only wonder is that it was not thought of years ago. The bureau comprises a laundry, a dye house and a repair shop, in the last of which experienced tailors and skillful needlewomen are constantly employed in putting into order every sort of wearing apparel.

Work is done here for both men and women, though it is especially useful, of course, to bachelors and other lonely men who have no one to keep their clothing in order for them. Wearing apparel when soiled or worn may be taken to the bureau or called for on postal card order, and put into thoroughly good condition again. The linen is washed and done up, missing buttons are replaced, stretched out buttonholes restored to their proper proportions, worn edges and strings renewed, gaping holes in the stockings filled up, while the outer clothing is cleaned, dyed, pressed, darned, patched or otherwise attended to as it may need. These things are all done at a very moderate price—a pair of socks darned for five cents, unless too far gone—and other things in proportion, the price being fixed in most instances by the length of time which the task requires.

Frequently also the bureau makes a contract with gentlemen to press, repair and keep in order their clothing by the year or month, the principle being the same as that by which the Chinese pay their physicians to keep them well. The bureau has a dozen branch offices in the suburbs and different portions of the city, so that patrons living at a distance may be easily accommodated. There are numberless busy men and women for whom the bureau will save many dollars in the course of a year. "A stitch in time saves nine," according to the proverb, and mending the ravages of wear and tear upon one's clothing saves a good deal else at the same time.—Boston Globe.

THE VISITING ODDFELLOWS.

THE Independent Order of Oddfellows is a popular society in Peterborough. This expression may be used in a double sense. The large membership of the two lodges shows that it is popular with men who desire to belong to benevolent societies on account of their social and other advantages, and it holds a good place in the estimation of the people on account of the character of its membership. There are several similar societies in Peterborough, each doing a good work and having a large number of members, and among the most prominent of these is the Order of Oddfellows.

The local members of the Order are pleased to have the Grand Lodge meet here this year. They are pleased to have an opportunity to welcome their brethren from all parts of the Province, and the preparations they have made for the reception and entertainment of their visitors shows the heartiness of their welcome. This feeling, however, is not confined to members of the Order, for the citizens generally join in extending a hand to the Grand Lodge, and in hoping, not only that the sessions may be productive of good results to the society and its members, but also that the visit of the delegates and others drawn to the town by the meeting may be a pleasant one.

THE SAME ANSWER READY.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH, the United States Congressman who is associated with Mr Erastus Wiman in the commercial union agitation, has addressed a circular to the other members of Congress on the subject. The United States has seen the benefits of protection and that system apparently has a firm hold on the people. Any proposal that seems aimed at the protective system is received with suspicion, and Mr. Butterworth endeavors to show that there is nothing in commercial union that a United States protectionist should fear. He tells them that but for protection European manufacturers of certain lines of goods would be able to control the markets at their very doors, but that commercial union with Canada would not effect the importation of goods from those countries against which the protective system was intended to operate. This argument may hold good in the United States; we do not intend to discuss that. But it will not apply in Canada. The National Policy was adopted here to build up the manufactures and business of Canada and to retain our own markets for our own people. It will not do to say that Europe alone was considered in Canada. This country was made a slaughter market by the United States, and that fact was one reason why the people determined by such a large majority to adopt and uphold the National Policy. Indeed, Mr. Butterworth appeals to the manufacturers across the line to favor commercial union in order that they may again unload their surplus on the markets of this country. He tells them that in Canada they would have "a constantly growing market for our manufactured surplus," a plain indication that under commercial union the markets of this country would be slaughter markets for the United States, where the manufacturers of that country would work off their surplus stocks, to the disadvantage and, in many cases, ruin of Canadian manufacturers.

But, the commercial unionists may say, would not the consequent cheapness of goods be an advantage to the consumers? And we answer, Did the people find the slaughter market system to be an advantageous one for them prior to 1879? The people came to the conclusion, forced upon them by hard facts, that to be prosperous the home markets should be retained, as much as possible, for home products, and nothing has occurred, or is likely to occur, to show that they were wrong. Nor is there any guarantee that cheap prices would be the rule long. When, by filling the shelves and warehouses of dealers with their surplus goods, the United States manufacturers had obtained control of the markets and closed the Canadian factories, there would be no guarantee that prices would not go up, and they would be sure to do so in years when the surplus would not be so great, or disappeared, while under such a system of uncertainty manufacturing would practically cease in Canada.

By his appeal to United States protectionists and manufacturers, Mr. Butterworth sounds a note that will not die away unheard in Canada, whether it has the desired effect in the United States or not. When it becomes a question of making this country a slaughter market for the United States, or protecting home industries and thus building up a prosperous country on a sound basis, the people of Canada will repeat the answer first given in 1878 and since twice repeated.

IF all the reports about the movements of McGarigle, the fugitive from Chicago, are true, it is not surprising that he escaped from the Chicago officer. The reports would have one believe that McGarigle was in several different places at once—in St. Catharines, Hamilton, Toronto and on the Schooner Blake heading for Kingston. If the man can perform such feats as that, it cannot be considered surprising that he was too swift and cunning for an ordinary Chicago law officer.

SEVERAL Reform papers are calling upon the Mowat Government to give them more printing to do. Of course they think it wrong for a Conservative Government to have work done in a Conservative newspaper office, but Mr. Mowat's neat plan of entering in the public accounts large sums as being paid to "sundry newspapers" encourages them to adopt the cry of Oliver Twist.

A Farmer's Mistake.

I know a well to do farmer, having eight children, who, as soon as they are old enough to support themselves, leave their home. Of the five boys, not one remains on the farm. They have gone to clerkship and other positions, in preference to staying on the much despised farm. A glance in the home may account somewhat for this. There never has been any effort to make it attractive for the children. The parents' aim has been to work and save, with scarcely a thought that their children had any other needs than food and clothing. They are active, bright minded boys and girls. It is no wonder that the dullness and monotony become unendurable.

This farmer does not hesitate to spend money in farm improvements, in fine stock, or in anything that will advance his financial interest; but any outlay for the children's pleasure is regarded as unnecessary and extravagant.

Children cannot feel that sense of proprietorship in the farm and its profits that is a stimulant to the heads of the household, and something is needed to take its place. Some personal property, even if a chicken or a pig, is a strong incentive. Children are sportive by nature—all young animals are—and some diversion is essential for leisure hours; otherwise their minds will wander off and dwell on the attractions supposed to pertain to village and city life.

If children love music and an organ or piano cannot be afforded, let them have smaller and less expensive instruments. Many an hour might be spent in the happiest way by a boy in his efforts to perform on the violin or accordion, that would otherwise pass discontentedly or in hurtful companionship.

A few dollars each year invested in reading matter will not only supply pleasant employment for leisure hours, but the means of mental improvement as well. There are so many excellent entertaining publications for the young, and at such low prices, that no family in which there are children should be without one or more.—American Agriculturist.

Children's Friendships.

Children are apt to seek the society of other children at about the sixth year of their ages. This should be a watchful period for the parents, as friendships contracted at this time have a very decided influence on the mind, morals and manners of their child. Nearly every child is influenced for good or evil through early associations. If allowed to be constantly with the nurse, their language and manners will, in nearly every case, be identical with those of the nurse. A mother should spend the greater portion of every day in the society of her children. If to rid herself of their noise she permits them to seek companions outside, she has no one to blame but herself if their manners and morals are corrupted. All children require companionship of those of their own age, but it is very essential that the parents should choose these companions.

Children can be readily taught to be neat and tidy in their habits by example principally, for they imitate closely the actions of their elders. A closet or other convenient place should be given them exclusively for their toys, provided there is no play room; then let it be understood that when play is ended all toys are to be returned to their proper place. If this rule is disregarded, the withdrawal of a favorite toy for a time, as punishment, usually has the desired effect of causing them to be more careful in the future. This device may have to be resorted to more than once, but it usually is successful in the end.—Mrs. Ellis L. Mumma in Good Housekeeping.

Sweetmeats and Pastry.

It was recreation hour at both the Polytechnic and Central grammar school. Streams of boys emerged from both institutions and at once made for a neighboring bakery. There they gorged themselves with sweetmeats and pastry of every description. Wizen faced little chaps of 12 and 14 tackle pies nearly as large as their heads, while their older classmates gave attention to the festive cranberry tart, the latter being composed of heavily sweetened cranberries and partly done dough. Occasionally one of the more adventurous boys sneaked out of the bakery and in some secluded spot lighted a cigarette, which he smoked till the 12:30 bell called him back to school.

Pastry, insufficiently cooked, and cigarettes make a poor combination. Fond mothers wonder why their boys have no appetite for dinner at night and vainly try to guess the reason. Did they provide their sons in the morning with an amply stocked lunch box containing delicacies which would charm the palate of the urchin, they would find that the latter would have better appetites for the evening meal. Instead, however, many boys are given so much money each morning to pay their expenses for the day. This includes the price of luncheon and car fare. Business men sometimes become dyspeptics by eating too fast, but it is unfortunate that youths and young men just leaving school should ruin their digestions before entering commercial life.—Brooklyn Eagle.

TRIPLE SOMERSAULTS.

THE REASONS WHY SO FEW OF THEM HAVE BEEN TURNED.

Several Attempts Which Resulted in Broken Necks—A 14-Year-Old Boy's Successful Feat—A Circus Man's Bold Offer—The Requirements.

The first remembered attempt to throw a triple somersault in this country was by a performer in Van Amburgh's circus in Mobile, Ala., in 1842. He fell on his head and broke his neck. Another attempt was made in London, Eng., in 1846. It was made in Astley's amphitheatre, then leased to Howe & Cushing, the American managers. In the company were Mr. I. Lipman, a fine vaulter, now in Cincinnati; the late Levi J. North, a famous equestrian; the late William O. Dale, an acrobat and equestrian, who afterwards lost his sight and died at Cincinnati; and William I. Hobbes, a champion leaper. It was previously announced that Hobbes would attempt a triple, and the house was jammed. He tried it, and was instantly killed.

The next to attempt the dangerous feat was John Amor, who was born in the home of Dan Rice's father, near Girard, Pa. Amor traveled for years in this country with Dan Rice's circus, and in that day was considered the greatest gymnast in America, if not in the world. He was said to be the first performer in America to turn a double somersault over four horses. In 1859 he went to England and traveled with a circus all through the United Kingdom. In the same year he attempted to turn a triple somersault at the Isle of Wight, but landed on his forehead after he turned twice, and broke his neck.

Billy Dutton performed the great feat while a member of Lake's circus, at Elkhorn, Ills., in 1860, at a rehearsal, in the presence of John Lowlow, the famous clown. Dutton was ambitious to have it to say that he did it, but did not make the attempt with the intention of repeating it. He made the leap from a high spring board, and actually turned three times. Dutton was very proud, but sensibly said that he would not try it again, and that his alighting on his feet was an accident, as he could not control his body after turning the second time.

OTHER FATALITIES.

Frank Stark, who was reared by John Robinson, the circus manager, undertook the feat at the fair grounds in Indianapolis in 1870 for a wager of $100. In the first attempt he turned three times, but alighted on his hands. Everybody was satisfied with the result, and the money was tendered him. He proudly refused it, saying that the feat had not been accomplished; that he would repeat it, and alight upon his feet before he felt sufficiently justified in taking the $100. He did repeat it, but struck on his head, dislocating his neck, and his death resulted in a few hours afterward.

Bob Stickney, the Apollo Belvedere of the modern arena, accomplished the great feat at the age of 14 years, while practicing in the Hippo theatre, on Fourteenth street, New York, in 1846. William Stein, at the time an attache of the circus, and who now, with his wife, gives a "second sight" performance, was one of the persons who held the common woolen blanket upon which Stickney alighted.

Sam Bernhardt, of Columbus, O., a retired leaper, while traveling with the Cooper and Bailey circus, in 1840, became dissatisfied with the double somersault feat, in which he was an adept, and burned to perform the triple. At Toledo he announced that he would make the attempt, and he did so, notwithstanding the advice of his friends not to try it. Sam made a splendid high leap, actually turned three times, but landed on his seat instead of his feet.

A BOLD OFFER.

Bob Stickney, who is now traveling with Forepaugh's circus, was interviewed in Detroit last Decoration Day. He said:

"I did it once, as related in your article, and although I have confined myself to riding, and have done no leaping for seven years, I can do it again. I get the highest wages in the profession, $250 a week, but if any circus manager will give me $300 a week I will engage to attempt a triple at every stand during the touring season. I do not mean to make the attempt more than once a day, and only in the daytime."

"Would you need any improved or original apparatus?" was asked.

"No. I would simply need the usual springboard at five or six feet from the ground. But I would need a strong net, with fine meshes. Farina introduced the net when he came to this country in 1878, and in Barnum's circus fired a woman out of a cannon into the air. It was really a very strong spring which elevated the performer. The net into which she fell made the feat possible. If ever the triple somersault can be made a daily performance, it will be by means of the net. If I undertook it I would have a straw mattress, ten feet square and one foot thick, placed on the ground about twenty feet from the spring board. On this I would have a feather mattress of the same length and width, but about two feet thick. On the top of the latter, and touching it, I would have a strong net, with meshes not more than one inch apart, and strained perfectly tight. For $300 a week I would make a daily attempt at the afternoon performances to accomplish this feat. But it would seem that leaping was going out of fashion nowadays. Since we had a fatal accident at the opening of this season, Forepaugh has discontinued the leaping act altogether."

That a triple somersault was ever accomplished before a circus audience after due announcement, and under the same conditions as double somersaults are performed, may be seriously doubted.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Tribulations of an Inventor.

The way of inventors without means or supporters is not to be envied. Nothing can be done with an invention in the present day unless the aspiring genius who secures a patent also engages the attention of men with money. Great corporations have to be appealed, and as they are not, as a rule, disposed to espouse the cause of every plausible device, the man with a patent must demonstrate to the satisfaction of managers that his ideas will stand the brunt of actual service after emerging from the experimental stage. The moral of this is that an inventor, to be successful, must have sufficient ability to organize a strong company composed of men whose names are a guarantee, and then one corporation will protect the other. This would have assured the adoption of the Terry cable system in this city. Without a big company behind the patent to take care of it, eastern capitalists who invested in the bonds issued on the new cable system refused to look at it, and simply said: "If you want our money you must take a system that has been tried to our satisfaction. We want no experiments involving our millions."—Globe Democrat.

WOMAN AND HOME.

A CHILD WITHOUT PET ANIMALS IS A SOLITARY BEING.

Use of Toilet Soap—Something More Than Housekeeping—A Farmer's Mistake—Children's Friendships—What City Physicians Tell The Chicago Daily News.

"The effects of anger upon the human milk may again be likened to the effect of a thunderstorm upon the dairy. Both are in effect electrical storms, only human passion has in it a more refined evil than mere acid. The more violent and crazy the anger the greater the danger. As one may become accustomed to large and repeated doses of opium, so, no doubt, an infant may (other circumstances favoring) become somewhat insured against the pernicious effects of milk that is subject to more or less frequent storms of passion, but if the child does escape severe and dangerous physical illness, it will hardly, in the transforming of milk to flesh, escape a most undesirable inheritance of character. A general irritability, bad temper—the result of trials poorly stood up to mentally—may keep the babe in constant unrest, and no one knows what ails the baby, he is so cross.

"What has been said of anger may be said of the other unhappy emotions, impressing the child after their kind, not always perceptibly but none the less surely. On the contrary, states of love, joy, peace, etc., act as most powerful tonics, and physiological action goes on under their stimulus in perfection. Thus the secretions are, as it were, happy; digestion and assimilation take place in the mother harmoniously and unconsciously, and the milk becomes perfect in its properties, the babe literally drawing in health, happiness and peace."—Dr. T. P. Mills.

PLEA FOR THE BOTTLE.

"It needs no argument to show that infants in all probability derive a large amount of positive exhilaration from the act associated with nursing, and the inference is plain that the deprivation may entail considerable disadvantage. It has always seemed to me cruel to thus early cut off the pleasures of life. The bottle and its appurtenances, moreover, can be kept clean, but not without the employment of a good deal more time and care than is usually bestowed upon it. The bottle and nipple should be afforded a brush of its own. Were I, in order to be explicit, to give directions for cleaning a nursing bottle, I should say wash both bottle and nipple well separately in plain water. Then soak them both for five minutes in a 2 per cent. solution of borax in water, scrub them both with the aid of the brush, borax water and soap. The nipple should be turned inside out and scrubbed. Rinse them all well several times in plain water. Hang the bottle and nipple separately in a dry place until needed.

"Another point of importance often overlooked is the necessity of giving to infants occasionally some water to drink. During the hot weather, when evaporation from the body goes on so fast, nothing will satisfy the demands of the body, even of an infant, so well as a drink of good, plain, pure water."—Dr. Robert Tilley.

DANGERS THAT BESET.

"Under the enervating influence of great heat tendencies toward death, dormant before, become potent. The weak link in the chain is broken. Whatever the predisposition to disease may have been, the depression of heat as the exciting factor becomes the 'last feather that break's the camel's back.' The higher the animal the greater are the dangers that beset early life, because the period of helplessness is prolonged in the ratio of special intelligence. Parental intelligence does not keep pace with racial tendencies, however; evident enough when we find that:

"1. Infants are fed upon starchy food before their salivary glands are developed, and attempts are made to raise babies upon beer, beef, griddle cakes, potatoes, skim milk, sour milk, or even if the milk be good it is often drawn from unclean bottles.

"2. The two extremes of wealth and poverty cause neglect of offspring. In the one case careless nurses are intrusted with the infant, and in the other neglect is unavoidable.

"3. Zymotic diseases leave as sequelæ scrofulous or some other depressed condition that only needs the push of exhaustion, however induced, graveward.

"Parents should know that milk is the only proper food for young children, and that coarse animal and vegetable diet is hurtful in any season and especially so in hot weather. Patent medicines and foods—especially soothing sirups, that always contain opium—help the little ones out of the world."—Dr. S. V. Clevenger.

FEEDING INFANTS.

"Be the food ever so wholesome in quality it must be perfectly clean. Probably as many babies die from good milk and food that has soured and become tainted by exposure as die from want of the right food. Many a physician will refuse to allow an ill fed woman to wean her baby; what matter though he knows her milk is not the best for the child, but at least it is clean and is not tainted when it reaches the stomach.

"'Boil a teaspoonful of powdered barley in a pint or a pint and a half of water, with a little salt, until barley is cooked. Leave it stand, well covered; when settled skim all impurities from the top carefully and strain; mix with an equal quantity of boiled milk if baby is 6 months old, or only one-half milk if less than 6 months. Older babes more milk. Keep bottle and mouthpiece in bowl of water when not in use. When baby is costive use oatmeal instead of barley. Infants of 6 months may have beef tea or soup once a day. Babies of 10 or 12 months may have crust of bread and piece of rare beef to suck.'

"The above are substantially the directions for feeding infants presented by Dr. Jacobi to the Public Health association of New York, and these rules have since by experience been found correct and proper to follow. Your child may need other food if it does not thrive; go and ask your doctor what to give it before it falls sick."—Dr. Ferdinand Henrotin.

THE CLOTHING.

"In my experience the first wrong thing I notice is the clothing of the child. Until a child is well past the critical period of teething flannel should always be worn over the bowels, and merino stockings should be kept on the year around, summer and winter. Wool or silk next the skin prevents sudden arrest of perspiration, and mothers should remember always one truth: The freer the perspiration the greater the danger of even a slight chilling of the surface. The babies from whom the sweat just rolls off are always the ones more liable to the dreaded summer complaint."—Dr. Kate L. Graves.

Children and Pet Animals.

A child brought up without the knowledge of pet animals is a solitary being, no matter if there be brothers and sisters, while a child who has animals to tend is never quite alone. A dog is of itself a liberal education, with its example of fidelity, unwearied activity, cheerful sympathy, and love stronger than death; nay, love that is triumphant over shame and and ignominy and sin—influences that so often wear out human love or make it change to hate. How many of us hold to our friends with a love as inexhaustible and inextinguishable as that which our dog gives to us? The child especially finds in the faithful creature much of its own impulsive and ardent life; the delight in little things, the ready curiosity, the ceaseless activity, the quick changes of occupation, the unabated interest in existence. Kittens, again, seem sent to give to a child just what the dog leaves out; the more refined ways, the soft playfulness, the gentle domesticity, the willingness to be tended and petted. Kittens about the house supply the smaller punctuation in the book of life; their little frisks and leaps and pats are the commas and semicolons and dashes, while the big dog puts in the colons and periods.

Animals, again, give to us, even by what they receive and evoke from us, the habit of care and tenderness. Those petted dogs we see carried in the arms of young girls in fashionable equipages are rarely a substitute for the natural object of such emotion, they are rather a preparation or intermediate possession that precedes it; something that is more than a doll and less than a human child. Mr. Carnegie tells us that he saw at a large New York stable a card nailed up giving for the coachman the address of the proper physician to be called upon if the favorite dog should be ill. He also tells us of a young lady who, having to go on a journey, had to leave her favorite collie to some one's special attention, and Mr. Carnegie suggested that as he had given her the dog, it might be perfectly safe to leave her with him, "or rather with Jack and the horse." With a grave shake of the head, she answered, "I have thought of that; but it won't do; he requires a woman's care." Here the woman and the favorite met on equal terms; neither could do without the other. The care given by the young girl was simply the anticipated tenderness of a mother for a child.

The self control that must be learned in dealing with animals is in itself an education. One of the child's first lessons in governing its impulses is when it finds that the kitten cannot be caught by running and shouting, but by quiet and measured approaches. The control of animals, from the lamb to the lion, is not a matter of force, but of gentleness and a steady eye. Impulses that seem the very strongest in animals, as the disposition of dogs to chase cats or bite, can be better overcome by accustoming them very early to the sight and touch of the weaker creatures than by any blows. All this is a lesson to the child, and it unconsciously learns the application to itself. In days when oxen were employed largely on our farms it used to be a common thing at a "cattle show" to see some sunburnt farmer's boy drive in a yoke of half grown steers, and win the admiration of all the men by the gentle skill with which he handled them. On a farm near my summer home there is a fine bull, which is better controlled and led by a boy of 13 than by anybody else. Their surely is, as Heine says, an occult sympathy between children and animals, as between two races not sundered very long ago.—T. W. Higginson in Harper's Bazar.

Use of Toilet Soap.

The opinion that of such a necessary article as soap for the toilet one can't use too much, is an opinion which late researches in science disprove. The attraction of the alkali in it for the oil of the skin as well as for its unclean accumulations, constitutes its cleansing property. Out of the 7,000,000 pores through which nearly two pounds of poisonous exhalation daily pass from the adult, come enough materials in a short time to produce fatal and filthy diseases. An eminent physician has declared that "if the skin be moderately active, three or four days suffice to form a layer which may be compared to a thin coating of varnish or sizing." As this accumulation increases and decomposition follows it is not necessary to describe the result. What agency but soap can remove it?

Many good authorities declare that water alone is sufficient, except at rare intervals. There are oil glands as well as excretory ducts, and for no idle purpose has nature produced these tiny human oil wells. Inunction, or the external use of oil, has a recognized place among the prescriptions of some famous modern physicians, who in this way seek to restore that necessary property of which the body has been deprived by the excessive use of soap or by disease. They claim that it enables the patient to resist cold, that its nutritive qualities convey heat to those organs which require it, that it gives a sense of exhilarating freshness, and that it is not only soothing in cases of nervous depression, but it is capable of strengthening weak lungs. For this purpose almond oil, cocoanut, olive oil or vaseline are daily applied by the aid of vigorous rubbing. To all such treatment and in most cases where inunction is not required, the daily application of soaps is injurious.

"What uncleanly habits!" some one exclaims. Not so. Plenty of soft water, a coarse wash rag, hand friction and a Turkish towel, with soap applied at rare intervals, and the skin should retain the delicate smoothness of an infant. Those milk baths indulged in by the ancient Roman emperors and empresses owed their emollient properties to the oil contained in the milk. Every old nurse knows, too, that weakly children are sometimes injured by too frequent ablutions. Dry rubbing is often the safest opiate for a nervous little one, answering many of the purposes of soap.

An eminent physician and scientist lately told me that he seldom used soap in his daily bath. "It makes the skin dry, hard and harsh, and renders me much more liable to take cold through any changes of the weather," said he. "At the same time, no rule can be given for the soap. Some persons secrete oil much more readily than others, and to such soap is more of a necessity," and he spoke much upon the desirability of using a pure soap or none at all.—Hester M. Poole in Good Housekeeping.

Something More Than a Housekeeper.

A wife and mother needs to be more than a good housekeeper; she must be in all things the mistress of the house, the companion of her husband and children. Now, what kind of a companion to anybody is a woman who is all wrapped up in her housework? The children ask her questions about something that has taken place, probably in her own vicinity, that any one would be supposed to know, and are sent to the father for information. They very soon come to the conclusion that mother isn't supposed to know anything outside of housekeeping, and do not trouble her by many questions. The father comes home with a glowing account of an event that is taking place in which he is very much interested, and is all enthusiasm over it. He wants somebody to talk to about it, but he has learned long ago that his wife has no interest in anything outside of her housekeeping, and he soon learns to find his entertainment elsewhere.

Visitors come to the house, very often women who are familiar with all the passing events, and she wonder why her husband and children are so much brighter and interesting with company than when alone. These women very often are not what she would call model housewives, yet their families are, as a general thing, more contented with their homes than all her housekeeping ability can ever make hers. People who have known her for a long time, remembering how entertaining she was as a girl, wonder why it is she is so much different. They ask her to sing or play, but she excuses herself with, "I haven't played for years, I have had so much to do I really haven't had time to practice." This is too bad for a woman who actually squanders time in unnecessary work, to admit not having time to practice an accomplishment that would be a delight to her family and friends.

Then, women, don't get completely enveloped in your housework. Remember, you owe more to your family and friends than merely a clean house. Find out what is going on about you outside of your own neighborhood. Take an interest in whatever interests your families. It may be only a baseball game or a yacht race that both father and little ones are enthusiastic over. Then learn all you can about it; find out the names of the rival clubs or yachts and take a lively part in the family conversation. To do this will require but a few minutes each day, and you will be well repaid by having a pleasant, enjoyable home, a home that husband and children will prize far above a "spick and span" one.—Boston Budget.

THE GIANT T GEORGE ST.

I have secured for the fall and winter trade of 1887-8, the largest and most complete stock of Cook Stoves, Ranges and Heaters, ever offered in Peterborough, and would direct special attention to the following popular Stoves as having been proved the very best in the market.

THE ORIGINAL NORTHWEST & MANITOBA, made by the E. & C. Gurney Co.

THE HAPPY COOK C., THE HAPPY COOK AND GRAND IMPERIAL, made by Peterborough Stove & Furnace Co.

THE MILNE WOOD COOK, ORION & JEWEL COOK, made by Barrow, Stewart & Milne.

I shall also be supplied by other manufacturers with the newest and best Cooking Stoves known to the trade.

In Wood and Coal Ranges, I hold a variety of patterns.

With regard to high art Base Burners, it is my intention not only to show the well established Stoves, such as the Athenian, Radiant Home, New Jewel and Art Garland, "all in new dress," but to add new designs of the most attractive appearance and strongest heaters.

Wrought Iron Ranges for hotels, shanty and domestic use kept in stock and made to order.

Special attention paid to Sanitary Plumbing, Gas-fitting, Iron Roofing, Iron Troughing etc., etc.

ADAM HALL.

THE CRYSTAL BLOCK.

We wish to thank our many customers in Town and County for the very liberal support given us this season.

Notwithstanding the great blowing of trumpets in the Dry Goods Trade, and all conceivable plans to catch, our trade has increased and our prospects brighter than ever.

We are preparing for a still larger increase in business during the fall and winter season.

Our importations will be large, and we feel confident that our efforts will be appreciated.

The balance of our Summer Stock we will continue to sell at clearing prices.

We would call your special attention to our Millinery Department Ladies are loud in their praises of this department. We are importing a large stock of ladies' and childrens' Mantles, Fur Trimmings etc., which we shall be pleased to have you call and see and compare prices.

LADIES OF THE HAREM.

HOME LIFE SCARCELY EXISTS FOR THE MOHAMMEDAN.

In Theory the Moslem Classes His Harem with Mecca's Holy of Holies—Social Customs in Various Countries of the East.

In theory the Moslem classes his womenkind with the Holy of Holies at Mecca. The innermost shrine of his temple and the rooms with lattived windows are both called by the same name of harem or sacred. The apartment is harem, and the ladies who live in it are harem for all but the lord and master. He may enter at will, but generally announces his coming beforehand, so that he may not run the risk of meeting female visitors, who are probably the wives of his friends. In well regulated houses the husband intrudes only at fixed hours, perhaps for a short time after midday prayer, and does not else favor his harem till he retires to rest. Home life such as we understand it can scarcely be said to exist for the Mohammedan. The man lives in and at his work outside and the woman among her slaves and friends in the arem.

In many respects the harems of Constantinople are allowed greater liberty than those of Egypt and Persia. The ladies of Stamboul are much addicted to walking, whereas those of Cairo are never seen in the streets on foot. At the Sweet Waters the harems stray over the meadows or picnic on the banks of the Kiaght Khaneh stream, with the fresh air blowing round them. The Egyptian dames, however, can never stir except in their carriages, and can only view the world and their neighbors from the windows of a brougham. The Bezetan of Stamboul is daily honored by great ladies, who also think no evil of riding in the public tramcars between Galata and Pera; but an Egyptian harem who attempted to mix with the crowd in such promiscuous fashion would be promptly banned. In other ways, however, especially since the days of Ismail Pasha, the harem of Cairo has opened its eyes considerably to what goes on beyond its proper ken.

The wives and families of foreign residents and travelers put down the various high harems on their visiting lists, and the biweekly promenades on the Shoobra and Gezireh avenues give the veiled ones an opportunity of seeing in the flesh the personages of whom they are perpetually hearing stories and anecdotes. It also gives the men a chance of having this and that khanem pointed out to them as they whirl past in their neat little carriages till each gets to know the other by sight at least tolerably well. The opera and the afternoon promenade are the chief excitement of Egyptian harem life. The Cairo opera house, built by the late khedive in a style commensurate with the lavish disregard of expense which marked his reign, is fitted with a dozen boxes on the second tier, whose fronts are framed with a gauzy screen, enabling the occupants to watch the play and the house, and supposed to prevent the house from watching them. The sparkling of bright eyes and diamonds are nevertheless apt to attract discreet attention, and a powerful glass nearly annihilates the screen, so that the beauties in reality come not only to see, but to be seen, like their western sisters round them. A separate entrance leads up to the harem boxes, and after the fall of the curtain the harem don their habarahs and steal out to their carriages by a back way, where it is whispered that many a note and bonbonniere await them on their passage.

The afternoon drive is also an imaginary contact with the world, though, as a matter of fact, the ladies might almost as well be at home. At 4 o'clock or thereabouts, a natty little brougham, drawn by a pair of long tailed Russian horses, drives up to the door and the ladies, for they almost invariably drive two and two—a great lady accompanied by a friend or a slave girl—are assisted into the carriage with as much care as if they were made of snow. The more scrupulous ones will even hold a parasol between their faces and the coachman to prevent contamination from side glances. Most of them, however, start with full intent to be seen as much as possible, and after settling themselves down on the satin cushions and assuring themselves that the mirror is well dusted, the cigarettes and matches in their places, the chocolate creams or nougat fresh from the bakery, and the bouquet sweet and properly arranged, slip off the habarah and are ready to front the gaze of the curious. The thinnest of yashmaks covers the reddest of lips, and the chin and well kohled eyes keep a smart look out for exchange of compliments with passers by.

The wives of the pashas do not wear the Turkish transparent yashmak, but cover their mouths and the lower part of the face with a cambric or cotton burghoo tied round the back of the head. The Shoobra and Gezireh drives are to Cairo much what the Row is to London, and all the young beys and pashas don their best, and either caracole forth on their prancing steeds, or, more luxuriously, are driven in the train of the harems. If the lady is inclined to exchange flowers, notes, cigarettes, or even conversation, no hindrance is likely to be offered by the black janitor on the box seat of the driver. But talking must be done in private, and some side walk or otherwise secluded spot must be chosen for anything more than a flying passing compliment. For in the east every man is the guardian, not only of his own harem, but also of everybody else's. A man may thrash his own wife to death, with very doubtful chances of anybody intervening, but he may not look at his neighbor's harem.—Home Journal.

The Term "Shop Girl."

Inadvertently I have aroused the indignation of a great army of young women who earn their living by selling goods from behind counters by alluding to them as shop girls. Thereby I have learned some lessons about the social structure behind the counters. I had supposed that the good old generic English term, "shop girl," might properly be applied to every woman who sold goods to a shopper. It seems, however, that the young women of New York who correspond in position to the male counter jumper deem themselves entitled to be called "sales ladies," and are even offended at the term "sales woman." In their private vocabulary a shop girl is one who works in the factories. The term shop girl, however, will probably still satisfy the great majority of the people who believe in plain Anglo-Saxon English.—Cor. New York Tribune.

In Memory of Thomas.

Mrs. Parvenu applied to the vestry of a church at a fashionable resort for permission to pay for a "stain glass winder" over her pew. "In memoriam, I presume!" said the warden. "Hey?" said Mrs. Parvenu. "I say," continued the warden, "I presume it is to be in memory of some departed relative or friend." "No," said the good woman, "no; none of my folks has departed yet, and I ain't bothered with many friends, but if it's got to be for somebody we'll make it to 'Thomas.'" "Thomas!" repeated the church official. "Yes, Thomas," said Mrs. Parvenu, "our waiter man; he fell downstairs carrying the breakfast things and broke his collar bone, and he's in the hospital now."—Chicago Herald.

More Necessary Than Love.

"I love you," he protested, "better than my life. I would die for you if necessary."

"Oh, nonsense," replied the practical girl. "Swear to me that you will get up and make the fires, and I'll consider your proposition."—The Judge.

A SEA GRAVE.

Yes, rock him gently in thine arms, O deep!
No nobler heart was ever hushed to rest
Upon the chill, soft pillow of thy breast—
No truer eyes didst thou e'er kiss to sleep.
While o'er his couch the wrathful billows leap,
And mighty winds roar from the darkened west,
Still may his head on thy cool weeds be pressed,
Far down where thou dost endless silence keep.
Oh, when, slow moving through thy spaces dim,
Some scaly monster seeks its coral cave,
And pausing o'er the sleeper, stares with grim,
Dull eyes a moment downward through the wave
Then let thy pale, green shadows curtain him,
And swaying sea flowers hide his lonely grave.
—James B. Kenyon in Cosmopolitan.

LUXURY RUN WILD.

What It Costs to be a Fashionable Young Man.

I was in an up town haberdasher's shop the other day, and in the course of a half hour's conversation I learned considerable about the personal decorations of the dude. A modest request to look at some robes de nuit was what started the shopkeeper. He took a glance at my golden locks and produced a box, remarking; "Here is something which will suit your completion."

It suited my complexion better than it did my pocketbook. It was made of a fawn colored Chinese silk, very soft and elaborately embroidered in light blue. A delicate tracery of blue vines and flowers ran around the collar, down the front and around the cuffs, and it was made to button with gold studs.

"This is a very simple pattern," remarked the gentle haberdasher, "and costs only $6. Here is a most elaborate style for $12," and he brought out a garment of rather finer material, simply covered with embroidery. I mildly insinuated that I wanted something for about $1.50. He looked unhappy for a moment, but recovered when he began to show me some silk underwear for $15 a set, and purple silk hose for $5 a pair. From underwear we got to shirts, pajamas and "blazers." The styles were unique and glaring.

"Do men really wear these things?" I inquired innocently. He gazed at me pityingly.

"Do you know what it costs to dress a fashionable young man?" he asked. "I mean simply for underclothing," he added. "To begin at the bottom, he needs, say, a dozen pairs of socks, at from $4 to $6 a pair. His half dozen sets of silk underwear will cost him $15 a set. His shirts will cost him $35 a dozen, and his collars and cuffs, of which he needs a good many, with his neckties, will cost as much more. Tennis shirts, long stockings, blazers, etc., will run up, in a summer season, to a couple of hundred dollars. Yes," he added, meditatively, "a young man needs about $500 to get his summer outfit, not counting his tailor's, and shoemaker's, and hatter's bills, which will amount to as much more. Of course his fall and winter outfits are more expensive."

"How much a year does it cost to dress properly?" I asked.

"I have customers who spend $5,000 a year on their clothes, and they are by no means extravagant," was the prompt reply."—New York Letter.

A Woman's Soul.

"Now, Miss Penhalligan," said the squire, "I am glad I have cornered you, for I want a word. You are spoiling Mrs. Gaverock. It is very kind of you to come, but don't condole with her—it makes her worse. She wants stirring up. I know women."

"Pardon me, you do not."

"I—I not know them!" laughed the old man. "Golly! I have had sixty-five years' experience of them, and I ought to understand them."

"No, you have spent sixty-five years in their society, and you understand them less now than you did sixty-five years ago. Then you might have learned, now you are past acquiring the knowledge."

The old man stared at Loveday, amazed at her audacity.

"You think," pursued the girl, "that a woman's soul is to be tinkered with a slater's ax. It is of too fine a nature to be touched even with the thumb. When a particle of dust enters your watch and stops the hands you hold your breath as you examine the works lest a breath should rust them. A woman's heart is more delicate in its mechanism than that, and a rough touch and a rude blast will spoil it forever. You know our Cornish proverb, 'The earth is strewn with potsherds.' It means that everywhere, in every village, almost in every house, are broken lives, lives broken by rough usage and careless handling. You would have used the finger glasses for a jest and a forfeit, and heeded nothing if they fell and were shattered. We poor women are like these same finger glasses, full of fresh and pure water for you men to dip your soiled fingers into and cleanse them—not for you to convert into bumpers to break for a wager."—From "The Gaverocks."

Edison's Menlo Park Balloon.

Aqueduct Commissioner Ridgeway has been spending a few days at Bellport, Long Island, where his plump face got well burned in boating. Chatting about his experience at Bellport, he said: "I presume you have noticed the reports about the balloon that Edison sends up nightly from Menlo park to the height of 4,000 or 5,000 feet, attached to a wire over which he sends a current of 'electricity and produces a brilliant star in the heavens. Although Bellport is eighty miles from Menlo park, Edison's balloon light could be plainly seen at night. I pointed it out to an old fisherman one evening and asked him what star it was. He replied very promptly that it was the north star. When I disputed him he said he knew better, because he had been steering his boat by it for weeks. I offered to bet him four bottles of beer that he was mistaken and told him if he would watch the star until 10 o'clock he would see it disappear. I remembered having seen that Edison pulls his balloon down every night at that hour. The old fellow accepted my bet and planted himself on the porch of the village hotel to watch the star. Sure enough, at 10 o'clock down it went. 'By gosh,' he said, 'who would have thought it? I have been a steerin' my boat by that 'ere star for months.' The old fellow was so excited over it that I paid the bet with good grace, although I had won it."—New York Tribune.

Deer Forests in Scotland.

There are about 3,000 shooting and deer forests in Scotland. The number of persons perpetually employed in connection with these may be moderately estimated at 6,000, allowing an average of two to each. During the season the number is considerably increased, and may be stated at 18,000, or six individuals to each sporting ground.—Boston Transcript.

Young Izaak Walton.

Mamma (to Walter, who has just returned from his first experience with a fishing rod)—What, back so soon?

Walter—Yes, 'm; I thought I'd come home. The worms were so nervous I couldn't get 'em on the hook.

A farm at nightfall is a varied village of living things, all sinking into slumber in their own way.—T. W. Higginson.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" "She," etc

"There, there," she said, cuffing right and left with her fat fists, "be off with you, every one. I can't have this noise going on here. Come, off you all go, and get the horses into the stable; they will be right away by morning if you trust them to the Kaffirs."

The woman, to John's astonishment and relief, literally, bundled the whole tribe of them out of the front door.

"Now then, rootbaatje," said the old lady, briskly, when they had gone, "I like you because you are a brave man, and were not afraid when they mobbed you. Also, I don't want to have a mess made upon my floor here, or any noise or shooting. If those men come back and find you here they will first get rather drunker and then kill you, so you had better be off while you get the chance," and she pointed to the door.

"I really am much obliged to you, my aunt," said John, utterly astonished.

"Oh, as to that," she said dryly, "it would be a great pity to kill the last English rootbaatje in the whole British army; they ought to keep you as a curiosity. Here, take a tot of brandy before you go, it is a wet night, and sometimes when you are clear of the Transvaal and remember this business, remember, too, that you owe your life to Tanta Coetzee. But I would not have saved you, not I, if you had not been so plucky. I like a man to be a man. There, be off!"

John poured out and gulped down half a tumblerful of the brandy, and in another moment was outside the house and had slipped off into the night. It was very dark and wet, for the rain clouds had covered up the moon, and he soon realized that any attempt to look for his horse would only end in failure and in his recapture also. The only thing to do was to get away on foot in the direction of Mooifontein as quickly as he could; so off he went down the track across the veldt as hard as his stiff legs would take him. He had a ten miles' trudge before him, and with that cheerful acquiescence in circumstances over which he had no control which was one of his characteristics, he set to work to make the best of it. For the first hour or so all went well, and then to his intense disgust he discovered that he was off the track, a fact at which anybody who has ever had the pleasure on a dark night of wandering along a so-called road on the African veldt will scarcely be surprised. After wasting a quarter of an hour or more in a vain attempt to find the path, he struck out boldly for a dark looking mass that loomed in the distance, and which he took to be Mooifontein hill. And so it was, only instead of keeping to the left, when he would have landed up at the house, or rather where the house had stood, he unwittingly bore to the right, and thus went half round the hill before he found out his mistake. Nor would he have found it out then had he not chanced in the mist and darkness to turn into the mouth of the great gorge known as Leuw Kloof, where he had once, months before, had an interesting talk with Jess just before she went to Pretoria. It was while he was blundering and stumbling up this gorge that at length the rain ceased and the moon got out, it being then nearly midnight. Its very first rays lit upon one of the extraordinary pillars of balanced bowlders, and by it he recognized the locality. As may be imagined, strong man as he was, John was by this time quite exhausted. For nearly a week he had been traveling incessantly, and for the last two nights he had not only not slept, but had endured a great deal of peril and mental excitement. Had it not been for the brandy Tanta Coetzee had given him he could not have got over the fifteen miles or so of ground he had covered, and now he was quite broken down, and felt that the only thing that he could do, wet through as he was, would be to lie down somewhere and sleep or die as the case might be. Then it was that the little cave near the top of the kloof, the same from which Jess had watched the thunderstorm, came into his recollection. He had been there once with Bessie after their engagement, and she had told him that it was one of Jess' favorite spots.

If he could once reach the cave he would at any rate get shelter and a dry place to lie on. It could not be more than 300 yards away. So he struggled on bravely through the wet grass and over the scattered bowlders, until at last he came to the base of the huge column that had been shattered by the lightning before Jess' eyes.

Thirty paces more and he was in the cave.

With a sigh of utter exhaustion he flung himself down upon the rocky floor and was almost instantly buried in a profound sleep.

CHAPTER XXXV.

THE CONCLUSION OF THE MATTER.

When the rain ceased and the moon began to shine, Jess was still fleeing like a wild thing across the plain on the top of the mountain.

She felt no sense of exhaustion now or even of weariness; her only idea was to get away, right away somewhere, where she could lose herself and nobody would ever see her again. Presently she came to the top of Leuw Kloof, and in a bewildered way recognized the spot and commenced to descend it. Here was a place where she might lie until she died; no one ever came there, except now and again some wandering Kaffir herd. On she sprang, from rock to rock, a wild, weird figure, well in keeping with the solemn and titanic sadness of the place.

Twice she fell, once right into the stream, but she took no heed, she did not even seem to feel it. At last she was at the bottom, now creeping like a black dot across the wide spaces of moonlight and now swallowed up in the shadow. There before her was the mouth of her little cave; her strength was leaving her at last, and she was fain to creep into it, broken hearted, crazed, and—dying.

"Oh, God, forgive me! God forgive me!" she moaned, as she sank upon the rocky floor. "Bessie, I sinned against you, but I have washed away my sin. I did it for you, Bessie, love, not for myself. I had rather have died than kill him for myself. You will marry John now, and you will never, never know what I did for you. I am going to die. I know that. I am dying. Oh, if I only could see his face once more before I die—before I die!"

Slowly the westering moonlight crept down the blackness of the rock. Now at last it peeped into the little cave and played upon John's sleeping face lying within two feet of her. Her prayer had been granted; there was her lover by her side.

With a start and a great sigh of doubt she saw him. Was he dead? She dragged herself to him on her hands and knees and listened for his breathing, if perchance he still breathed and was not a vision. Then it came, strong and slow, the breath of a man in deep sleep.

Should she try to wake him? What for? To tell him she was a murderess and then to let him see her die, for instinct told her that nature was exhausted; and she knew that she was certainly going—going fast. No, a hundred times, no!

Only she put her hand into her breast and drew out the pass, on the back of which she had written to him, and thrust it between his listless fingers. It should speak for her. Then she leaned over him and watched his sleeping face, a very incarnation of infinite, despairing tenderness and love that is deeper than the grave. And as she watched gradually her feet and legs grew cold and numb, till at length she could feel nothing below her bosom. She was dead nearly to the heart.

The rays of the moon faded slowly from the level of the little cave, and John's face grew dark to her darkening sight. She bent down and kissed him once, twice, thrice.

Napoleon the Great

(there was only one great Napoleon) wished the word impossible banished from the dictionary. In many cases where leading physicians have pronounced a cure impossible, consumptives and victims of other fell diseases have been restored to health by using Dr. R. V. Far more nutritive than cod liver oil, a powerful invigorating tonic and as harmless as it is powerful.

CANOEISTS IN CAMP.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NORTHERN DIVISION, A. C. A.,

The Races for the Prize Flags—Commodore Wilkin Welcomed—He Reviews the Canoe Fleet—Incidents of the Camp.

A.C.A. CAMP, JUNIPER ISLAND, Aug. 6 — The extra special sailing race for any canoe or rig drew a large number of entries. The following were the places at the finish:—

1st. S. Britton, Lindsay C.C., Aurora.
2nd. C. A. Neid, Mohican C.C., St. Hubert.
3rd. Colin Fraser, Ubique C.C., Una.
4th. W. A. Leys, Toronto C.C., Dawn.
5th. W. Lister, Lakefield C.C., Wawa.
6th. R. Tyson, Toronto C.C., Isabella.
7th. J. D. Graham, Lakefield C.C., Ripple.
8th. J. G. Edwards, Lindsay C. C., Polly Ann.

There were sixteen entered, but Darcy Strickland upset at the start. The others got away on very even terms, Britton soon drew ahead and held the lead. Dr. Neid was immediately after him. J. Z. Rogers upset, losing his chance of a good place, for he was then third, and he somewhat bothered Colin Fraser. Reid of Bobcaygeon upset at the outer buoy. Britton by remarkable good sailing increased his lead to the finish, Dr. Neid dropping back but being a good second. Colin Fraser and Leys were close behind, having had a tustle for third place. Altogether it was a very pretty race, and there was a good breeze.

About the time the Cruiser was due the canoe fleet assembled and formed in two divisions, sailing and paddling, and formed in line to receive Commodore Wilkin. As he appeared and passed between the lines in a canoe paddled by Vice-Commodore Rogers and ex-Commodore Edwards he was recelled with enthusiastic cheers. After he had landed at the Headquarters wharf the canoe fleet passed in review before him and Vice-Commodore Rogers.

The prize won by Mr. Britton in the special sailing race was then presented to him by Mrs. R. Lundy, the donor.

The flags for prizes, or rather those of them that had been already received, were exhibited at headquarters, where they were admired by the members and their lady friends.

The second contest was a paddling race for single blades. The following were the three who entered, and their order at the winning point:—

1st. George Fitzgerald, Peterborough, Wawa.
2nd. Arthur Blade, Peterborough, Matchless.
3rd. H. S. Greenwood, Peterborough, Imp.

Fitzgerald paddling in his old style led from the start, turned the buoy first and then made a spurt giving him lead of several canoe lengths which he kept to the finish. There was a similar distance between the second and third.

Next was a paddling race with single blades for the wider canoes. There were six entries, and four starters, placed as follows:—

1st. H. F. McKendrick, Ubique C. C., Doubtful.
2nd. J. N. McKendrick, Ubique C. C., Mamoe.
3rd. D. A. Burgess, Ubique C. C., Minnie.
4th. C. Fraser, Ubique C. C., Una.

Soon after the start H. McKendrick broke his paddle, and had not another, but his brother who had a second paddle threw it to him, when he caught it and continued paddling, hardly losing a stroke so quickly was it all done. At the turning buoy H. McKendrick led with his brother close after. It was a pretty close race for first and second places between the two brothers, and Burgess was not far behind them.

Some Indians from Chemong Lake being on the course a subscription for prizes for a paddling race between them. There were four started, who had a spirited contest paddling very well with not much to choose between them. George Taylor came in first Tibbie second, William Taylor third, Nott, a lad, fourth.

Then followed a hurry scurry race. This was a run of thirty yards to their canoes on the shore, which they had to take with them as they swam till the word was given to get into their canoes and paddle 200 yards to the winning post. The following were the places at the finish.

1st. Darcy Strickland, Lakefield C.C.
2nd. H. F. McKendrick, Ubique C.C.
3rd. J. D. Graham, Lakefield C.C.

There were two other starters. They all five took the water about the same time. At the work of command Strickland and H. McKendrick were quickly in their canoes and Graham and Burgess were not much longer. J. N. McKendrick filled his canoe and swam ashore. Strickland with the single blade and H. McKendrick with the double paddle had a sharp contest for the first place, but Strickland gained.

In the evening the breeze was still too fresh for the illuminated parade which had to be postponed. No preparations had been made for a fire at headquarters, but there were several smaller camp fires, among others at the camp of the family of Vice Commodore Rogers, and at the Lindsay Club Camp.

There were a considerable number of arrivals in the afternoon and evening, chiefly from this district.

A. C. A. CAMP, JUNIPER ISLAND, Aug. 7.—To the regret of all the camp the Rev. Mr. Neid was indisposed and was unable to conduct divine service, but Mr. Cayley read the morning prayers to a congregation of about two hundred under the trees at the back of the headquarters camp. Most of the members and lady visitors had assembled with some of the residents of the summer cottages on the adjacent islands. Altogether a hundred and one canoes came to the headquarter wharves on the occasion. The singing, thanks to some of the ladies, was a great addition to the service.

The day was passed quietly, and in the evening there was a service of song round a camp fire at headquarters. A great number of hymns and anthems were admirably sung.

It was a shock when the news came of a man who had been camped at Boschink, a few miles away, having been drowned near Eagle Mount.

A visitor to camp had a novel experience capturing a porcupine, but not without receiving some wounds in the encounter.

A.C.A. CAMP, JUNIPER ISLAND, AUG. 8.—The sun rose brightly this morning and soon cleared away the mist that was hanging over the lake and islands. The wind was so light that there seemed to be very little chance of good sailing races, but before the appointed hour a moderate breeze sprung up.

At half past nine o'clock there was a sailing race for decked canoes, any rig or ballast. The following was the order:—

1st. Dr. Neide, Mohican C.C., St Hubert.
2nd. W. A. Leys, Toronto C.C., Dawn.
3rd. S. Britton, Lindsay, C.C., Aurora.
4th. R. Tyson, Toronto C.C., Isabella.
5th. S. J. English, Peterborough, Nassau.
6th. H. A. Morrow, R. M. C.C.C., Fleeta.
7th. J. G. Edwards, Lindsay C C., Polly Ann.
8th. W. Lister, Lakefield C.C., Wawa.
9th. Darcy Strickland, Lakefield C.C., Mabel

There were ten starters. Dr. Neide was ahead on the first round and maintained the lead to the end, then Leys and Britton gave him a close tustle. So did Jas. Edwards in the first round, but he lost ground afterwards. Leys and Britton also had a lively contest for second place, and the Aurora was gaining at the finish. The time of the winner was 1 h. 8 m. 37 sec.

Five minutes later the open canoes, any rig or ballast, were started. They finished as follows:—

1st. C. Fraser, Ubique C. C., Una.
2nd. W. Read, Bobcaygeon C. C., Leha.
3rd. J. E. Hawkins, Lake St. Louis C.C., Vic.
4th. H. F. McKendrick, Ubique C.C., Doubtful.
5th. Jas. D. Graham, Lakefield C. C., Ripple.
6th. J. N. McKendrick, Ubique C.C., Mamoe.
7th. A. I. Wright, Lakefield C. C., Seagull.

Some of the leaders in this race were well up among the closed canoes. Fraser was well in front throughout, and Read was a good second. The time of the winner was 1 h. 13 min. 35 sec. It was a very pretty sight when these two races were proceeding, at the same time the white sails glistening in the sun.

There followed a paddling race with the following result:—

1st. Dr. Douglas, V. C., Lakefield C. C.
2nd. Arthur Blade, Peterborough.
3rd. H. S. Greenwood.
4th. P. W. Strickland, Lakefield C. C.

Dr. Douglas led throughout, his time being 10 min. 34 sec. for the mile course.

Other races take place this afternoon.

Attempted Suicide.

OTTAWA, Aug. 8.—Mrs. William, a young married woman, tried to kill herself at her house on Wellington street last night by cutting her chest with a file. The blood flowed freely and had not a doctor arrived speedily the woman would have bled to death. She had been drinking, but may recover.

Double Drowning Accident.

LINDSAY, Aug. 8.—On Saturday night about eleven o'clock several canoes started down Bougog river for Sturgeon Point; one canoe that was only capable of carrying two persons, took in three, Miss Carl, Mr. Cameron and Mr. Saunders. Just as they entered the late, it being rough, the canoe filled with water. Cameron who was a good swimmer, started for the shore but was drowned; Miss Carl was also drowned. Mr. Saunders, by sticking to the over-turned canoe, was saved. The bodies have not yet been recovered.

POETICAL REFLECTIONS INSPIRED BY A SAIL DOWN THE RIVER.

Sketches of the Scenery—The New Jubilee Park—Reference to a By-Gone Episode.

All the world and Dorothy Foster, wending their way to the north, crowding, jostling, chattering, gossiping a parasol lost here, a baby there. Irate Pater and querulous Mater, a terrible confusion of tongues from John o' Groats to Lands End.

No—Not for Joseph said I—my head ached, my brain was weary, and though prone to and fond of mingling with my kind I felt that absolute rest for the weary was imperative and I looked with longing eyes southward.

The breezes blew to welcome me and kissed me on each cheek,
And tried in every way they could an invite for to speak.

So I boarded the steamer Golden Eye, "and with the flag apeak and the helm aport," was off for a lazy if not for sport and while northern lakes have, no doubt, a great attraction in their thousand rock isles and clear waters, yet the ever tortuous Otonabee, with its banks fringed with the lofty, leafy denizens of a vanished forest. The ast relics as it were,

OF A STRICKEN RACE,

and fertile farms with their grassy glades and grain clad slopes where one might "lie down in green pastures" and "wander by still waters" has ever had an unutterable charm for me.

Gliding along the beauteous stream indulging in many a quaint day dream or sad memory of

The pure, the bright, the beautiful, that stirred our hearts in youth,
The impulse of a wordless prayer, the dreams of love and truth,
The longing after something lost, the spirits yearning cry,
Revivings of our better hope, the things that never die—

So I went drifting with the tide floating away and not being troubled with much company thus I passed my time with an occasional chat with the cheerful, genial, intelligent, Capt. McDonald—and I have no hesitation in saying that Commodore Calcutt has got the right man in the right place, and indeed he is always striving for this end, and I think with a fair share of success.

For a little while, indeed, while half dozing I fancied that I was travelling along a road, and a corduroy one at that, built by Commercial Unionists as a link to bind us with our respected neighbors over the pond. But waking with a start I found the boat bumping over thousands of logs and it made me exclaim "we do declare as were alive some one has let loose a drive."

I did not for a time feel very happy, but that feeling was not so much from the present disturbance as from the bitter recollection of having once on a time some years ago at the breaking up of winter driven many miles on a single bob over a pure and unadulterated corduroy, well I cant call it a highway—let us call it a by-way.

And well do I remember when I reached the caravans area at night, the compassionate solicitude of the lady of the house with regard to ourself.

THERE WAS NO MISTAKE ABOUT IT.

I limped, I dragged a leg after me, I groaned, not in spirit only but audibly. In fact as I rolled off that bob I have a dim recollection of saying something that sounded like ham (without the eggs). I suppose I was thinking of my supper—let me suppose it now. The dear old soul—no that is wrong, she was not over forty-five and a maiden. The young lady of the house asked me if I were much hurt? if my ankles were sprained? was my leg out of joint? and what not? But I told her no, I was not hurt very bad—I was just like our late member, simply unseated. She went out very suddenly and must have stumbled over the dog or the cat in the hall as I heard something that sounded like "brute" snarled out and why I don't know, but I did not see my sympathizing friends any more—ever more. But revenous a nos moutons.

"Let us resume the picking of our herring." After a delightful sail I reached the western terminus of the river, Jubilee Point, and a very "delectable land" it is, and will be much more so when the work of under-brushing, making avenues and building of the hotel and ball room, now in progress, is finished. With his noted energy and enterprise, Squire Calcutt is pushing on the work and I believe he will leave no stone unturned to make this resort second to none for comfort and pleasure, to say nothing about the sanitary benefits to be derived from an outing temporary or protracted thereon.

The pine, the birch and the maple in umbrageous conjunction, form a delightful retreat for a leisure hour. Tables and seats are scattered under the trees and picnic parties cannot possibly, even now, find a more pleasurable spot for recreation.

"Here they may breath the breath of pine woods sweet,
The blue sky overhead—the green grass 'neath their feet."

The breeze of the lake was most refreshing and the view of the southern shore with its sloping hills beautifully wooded studded with happy homesteads and purple ful orchards. That charming little spot Gore's Landing, nestling in the bosom of evergreen foliage, the glancing wave, the dark green fringe of sedge, and the islands in the distance looking like glimpses of fairy land; now almost extinct by the passing cloud now bursting forth in radiance as Old Sol once more asserts his supremacy.

I tell you:—

'Twas joy to us in this retreat,
Immantled in ambrosial dark,
To drink the cool air and to mark
The landscape winking through the heat.

Well, I spent one day in sunshine and shadow; I paddled round the river and adjacent shores of the lake, and am far too modest to boast of the fishes I did take, and when the Golden Eye returned from her trip to Harwood and re-embarked me and my belongings. As I steered northward

The setting sun's reflected hue
To purple changed the lake's deep blue.
Mildly and softly the western breeze
Just kissed the lake—just stirred the trees,
And with mind at peace and heart at rest,
We homeward steered to our lowly nest.

Well, my outing is over, and I am the better of it, not only physically but morally. I am thankful to a Beneficent Creator for these oases in the desert of life's labor, and I sometimes think that the Psalmist of old must have had some such load lifted from soul and body as I had, when he shouted in the exuberance of his joy and gratitude;—"Bless the Lord, oh, my soul, and all that is within me bless His holy name."

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind

THE FULL COMPLEMENT

REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TWO ORDERS HERE.

The Encampment Closes its Business—More Cantons Arrive—Grand Lodge Representatives.

The Grand Encampment resumed business at two o'clock on Wednesday afternoon Lieut. General Underwood, of Kentucky, was received with marks of distinction. At three o'clock the election of officers for the the current year took place as follows:—

John Sinclair, Petrolia ..... G.P.
Ebner Fraser, Hamilton ..... G.H.P.
J. T. Homerbrook, Toronto ..... G.S.W.
N. D. Dawson, London ..... G.S.
E. Belch, London ..... G.T.
J. A. Macdonald, Arnprior ..... G.J.W.
Jas. Oliver, Toronto ..... G.R.

Business relating to the internal economy of the Order was taken up, and the Encampment adjourned.

The representatives of the Grand Lodge, together with several cantons, arrived in the evening.

This morning at 9 o'clock the Grand Deputies assembled in the Court House, the Grand Master presiding.

They were welcomed as follows by Bros. Jas. R. Stratton and Jas. Stevenson:—

To the Grand Master, Grand Officers and Representatives of the Grand Lodge of the I. O. O. F of Ontario:

BRETHREN,—The pleasing duty has been assigned me, on behalf of the Oddfellows of Peterborough, of extending to you the most cordial welcome it is possible to express in words, on the important occasion of your visit to this town, for the purpose of holding your annual grand session. While this occasion, in a fraternal sense, is to be counted one of the most auspicious society circumstances to the local members, and one which, I beg to assure you, they fully and heartily appreciate, it has, I am happy to say, a far wider and more general significance.

We of Peterborough count it an especial good fortune that our town should be selected as the annual rendezvous of the Provincial world of Oddfellowship during the Jubilee of Her Most Gracious Majesty's reign; for you need not to be assured that among the high and noble principles embraced in the tenets of our society that of loyalty to the throne and person of our Sovereign is paramount, and that the Oddfellows of Canada are composed of men who can claim the proud distinction of not requiring to yield first place to any other class or community in these respects.

The Oddfellows of Peterborough, with the frankness which the truth demands, also beg to assure you, brethren, that they have so exemplified our principles in a society sense and so lived them in their personal capacities that they have earned the general respect and good will of the community, so that the cordial welcome you receive from us will not differ from that of our citizens generally, except in the respect of the peculiar conditions and sentiments which the bond of brotherhood engenders.

We shall consider ourselves honoured by the presence in our town for several days of a body of men who, while they may not represent in the most extended, or in any specific sense, the wealth and commercial importance of our province, can yet claim the prouder distinction of representing its moral worth, and the widest and most beneficent practical application of the crowning Christian grace, charity, which covereth the multitude of sins; gives comfort in sorrow; gives relief in distress; gives hope in despair.

Again brethern, I make you thrice welcome to Peterborough, and the freedom of the privileges of local Oddfellowship; and here permit me to express the wish and hope that the sessions of the Grand Body may be marked by that harmony and good feeling which are characteristic of its meetings, and that the result of its labours may redound to the permanent benefit of our Society and the advancement of the noble principles upon which it is founded.

On behalf of the Oddfellows of Peterborough,

J. R. STRATTON, M.P.P.

P. G. Peterborough Lodge I.O O.F., No. 111.

To the Grand Master, Grand Officers and Representatives of the Grand Lodge of the I. O. O. F. of Ontario:—

GENTLEMEN,—As representative of the citizens of the town of Peterborough in my capacity of Mayor, I have the greatest pleasure in giving you a most cordial welcome. This town is justly proud of its commercial importance and business thrift but I assure you that it also appreciates the honor it has received in being selected as a meeting place of your Grand Lodge and Grand Encampment, and you are hereby confidently assured that so far as intention and earnest effort can avail, you shall be accorded the heartiest possible hospitality.

I am happy to say that, in response to the intimation of the Chairman of the Reception Committee, the body over which I have the honor to preside, unanimously and cordially identified themselves with the Oddfellows of the local societies, and were pleased at the opportunity of assisting in arrangements to make your stay among us as comfortable and entertaining as our good will and united efforts can effect. In this action, I am certain, we receive the sympathy and support of all the citizens of the town.

Both in my official capacity and as a member of your society, I have noted with gratification and interest the important position which the Oddfellows' Order occupies in the community, both as a social element, binding together a loyal brotherhood by bonds that appeal strongly to the best sympathies and impulses of the human heart, and as a systematized beneficence which gives relief to the suffering, and which is, in the sublime language of Holy Writ, "a very present help in time of trouble." As Mayor of the town, and personally charged to a considerable extent with the dispensing of charity, I have occasion to know that evidences of the unostentatious, but persistent and systematic, benefactions of the Oddfellows' Society are encountered on every side, and that to them is due the fact that many worthy objects of benevolence are not only substantially aided, but are spared the humiliation so often associated with the enforced acceptance of civic assistance.

Having all these considerations and others too obvious to need mention in view it gives me great pleasure, on behalf of all classes of the citizens of Peterborough, to extend you, gentlemen, a most cordial welcome to the town and its hospitalities. I feel confident that the next few days will, in the amplest manner, verify my assurance of welcome. I trust that your deliberation may be attended with success, and that when you shall have completed your business and returned to your homes, only pleasing recollections may be associated with the visit of your Grand Lodge and Grand Encampment to Peterborough.

Gentlemen, accept at the hands of the Mayor, the freedom of the Town of Peterborough for the coming week.

On behalf of the citizens of Peterborough,

J. STEVENSON, M. P.,

P. G. Otonabee Lodge No. 13, and Mayor of Peterborough.

The Rev. Mr. WALLACE, of the Charlotte Street Methodist Church, spoke a few words to the representatives. He said that his heart warmed toward the Oddfellows as he saw what they were doing in this town for the widow and orphan. He could say, too, that so far as carrying out the precepts laid down in the constitution, they were carrying out some of the chief principles of Christianity.

After a formal opening the Grand Lodge adjourned for the day.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

THE LAKE OF ISLANDS.

WHERE THE EXCURSION GOES TO-MORROW MORNING.

The Charms of Stoney Lake—How to Cook Fish—Dangers of Deep Water—A Narrow Escape.

A bright, blue sky with fleecy clouds seated here and there, the concave re-produced in peaceful waters, many an island just rearing its rocky head above the lake or proudly rising to an eminence, white tents spread in all directions, canoes skimming the surface of the pelucid flood, paddles gleaming and lashing in the sunlight: this is Stoney Lake on an August day. It is not always that the people of Peterborough fully appreciate and develop the gifts bestowed by Nature; but in this case they realize the benefits of a beautiful summer resort within easy reach. For the past month or more the

COTTAGES DOTTED ALL OVER the lake have been inhabited, and as for camps, there is simply no end to their number. The young fellows (and girls, too) used to the uncomfortable dress prescribed by city fashion find welcome relief in light, cool camping suits. The freedom of camp life, where formality is an unwelcome guest, is, perhaps, the greatest attraction to those who pitch their tents here; but everybody enjoys boating among the maze of islands, and who is there that can resist the charms of fishing? Talking about fish, if there is one thing more than another, most superlatively excellent—something which no appetite can withstand—it is fish cooked in real old camp style. Did you ever see it done? Well, then, you have missed a sight. The camper takes the maskinonge, which has been caught just a short time, and then he rolls us his sleeves. You are requested at this juncture to get a rock (there is no difficulty in procuring this article here), lay it on its edge and build a fire against it. By the time

THE FIRE IS CRACKLING

you find the camper sitting at the end of a short board, the tail of the fish in one hand and a knife in the other making the scales fly. He tells you to go back and heap some more wood on the fire, and, obedient to his command, you do so. You return to find the fish dressed, cleanly washed and cut in large pieces. Your commanding officer then looks critically at the fire, stirs it, and cuts three or four gads from a growing tree, taking care to have two prongs at the end. These he sharpens, and by this time a bed of coals is sending out its fervent heat. He pushes a stone or two close to the coals, drives the sharpened prongs into the pieces of fish, just lays them over the stone and there they stay till—turned and watched so as not to inflict burning—they are toasted dry. When all are done, butter, pepper and salt are passed around, and you and the rest are invited to partake. And he who would decline such an invitation shouldbe considered capable of

TREASON, STRATEGEMS AND SPOILS

and wealher prophecy.

This year has been one of activity on the lake. More than twenty new cottages have been built. It is to be regretted that more taste is not exhibited by the builders this year in the erection of their summer houses. With few exceptions the boards are simply slung together. It is not necessary to build grand lodges (though Grand Lodge Oddfellows might think so) or even expensive ones. If the owners would only make them grotesque by the use of colors or some external decoration it would be much more pleasing to the eye than they are now. A notable exception is the Swiss cottage erected by Mr. J. E. McIntyre above Boschink, also Mr. Wm. Loch's Swiss cottage or Pompadour Island and Capt. Eden's romantic little place on No. 26 (called Paradise Hall to prevent people saying that it was the Garden of Eden). Mr. Geo. Strickland is also the owner of situated near Fanny Lake, and that of Mr. J. B. McWilliams, with its French roof and airy situation near the Burleigh Falls, also is much admired. On Brady's Island Mr. Peplow, of Port Hope, has erected a house, and at Boschink a number of American gentlemen are putting up a villa of six cottages. Mr. Geo. Cochrane has built on Eagle Mount; Mr. J. Hull, Lakefield, on the main shore, near Mount Julian; Mr. T. Menzies, on Buck Island; Mrs. Dr. Bell, Lakefield, on No. 25; Mr. Fred Barlee, Lakefield, on No. 25; Mr. Geo. Roger on Juniper Island; Mr. E. H. D. Hall, on an island near Pompadour Island; Mr. J. McClelland, on Pompadour Island; Mr. F. Tate, Lakefield, on the main land near Hurricane Point; Mr. Anderson, Toronto, on an island half way up to Burleigh, and Squire Cox, Lakefield, on No. 26; Mr. Geo. Rogers on Juniper Island; Mr. E. H. D. Hall, on an island near Pompadour Island; Mr. J. McClelland, on Pompadour Island; Mr. F. Tate, Lakefield, on the main land near Hurricane Point; Mr. Anderson, Toronto, on an island half way up to Burleigh, and Squire Cox, Lakefield, has put a commodious mansion on horseshoe Island, instead of the one he had last year.

A PRETTILY DESIGNED HOUSE

One of the pastimes which campers here enjoy to the full is bathing. At early morning and on the evening they have their limbs in the cool water. To those unaccustomed to swimming, however, it is a DANGEROUS SPORT.

Not long ago two young fellows nearly lost their lives while bathing. John Carlisle, Harry Taylor and Geo. Little were camped on an island. They were all going in for a bathe. Toylor, who is a good swimmer, went out quite a distance and returned. Little, who had not mastered the art, and was standing on a rock which sloped steeply in the water; while Carlisle, not prepared, was back at the camp, a few hundred feet away. Suddenly Little slipped and went down and out from the shore. Taylor at once sprang to his assistance, but in his frantic efforts to save himself Little clutched Taylor in a death grip around the shoulders and both went under. Carlisle, who was apprized of the danger by shouts, ran with the utmost speed to rescue his drowning companions. He seized the canoe on the shore, and, unable to find a paddle, shoved it off and paddled with his hands. In the meantime Taylor had released himself from the tight embrace and when the canoe arrived was able to get in it. Little had gone down twice and was sinking a third time when Carlisle succeeded in getting hold of his hand under the water. They made slow and careful progress to the shore, where both Taylor and Little, in a half drowned condition, were put under proper treatment.

BY SUPERHUMAN EXERTION

In going around the lake the visitor becomes acquainted with the residents. Among the noted characters is Jimmy Bertrand (pronounced Bertraw) of the Mount Julian Hotel. No one ever saw a more jolly landlord than Jimmy. It makes you laugh ourself to see the intense way he enjoys a joke. On the moment he sees the point he smiles and soon his most remote circumference is shaking with merriment. Jimmy keeps a good house and sets a good table. John Holmes, of the Burleigh Falls Hotel, is not a great deal like his brother landlord down the lake. He is just as stout, but more of

A PHILOSOPHIC TURN.

Those who know him, however, say that he's a good fellow. No one should fail to visit Mr. Claque's house, opposite Mount Julian. Here is to be seen many specimens of primative art. Capt. Eden, of the Cruiser, is not a resident, but, with his steamer, is a daily and welcome visitor at the lake. A more gentlemanly, good natured, and obliging captain could not be found.

It was the evening of a hot day. The sun, a great red ball, marches with progressive majesty along till he sets on the horizon's verge flinging a crimson flood of effulgence over the face of the water. The beautiful effects of sunset after shower—the brilliant gold, lining the cloud; the bright flecks in the upper sky, are absent. Only the single eye of day, bleared and blood shot, gives a last look before closing for the night. The spectral shapes reflected in the water and moving uneasily in the stirring wave; the red glow against rock and tree, cottage and camp, gradually fade and give place to the shadows of twilight. The rising of the moon is the signal for the tuning of musical instruments, and until late in the night the sweet echoing of mingled songs, choruses and the strains from violin or guitar come over the water from distant islands,

LOST AT SEA.

Terrible Suffering of a Shipwrecked Crew—Devoured by Sharks.

NOGALES, Ariz., August 9.—The sloop Sarah, 18 tons register, owned and commanded by Abraham Bajarim, left Mulejo July 25. The vessel had on board the captain, his wife and children and neice, and Superintendent Hals, of the Baltimore copper mill at Santa Rosa, and a crew of five men. While between San Pedro and Maritnez, California, the vessel was struck by a heavy surf and capsized. All on board perished, excepting the captain and four sailors, who saved themselves by climbing on the bottom of the slope. On July 30 two of the sailors became crazy, and said they were going ashore, and immediately plunged overboard. They had no sooner struck the water than sharks devoured them. The captain, one sailor and a small boy remained on the bottom of the vessel for eight days, sustaining life by catching turtles that would come near, and sucking their blood. They were rescued in a most pitiable condition by the sloop Refuge.

Attempt to Wreck a Train.

DEVENPORT, Ia., Aug. 9.—An attempt was made yesterday to wreck the eastbound train on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific road, near Iowa city. The plot seems to have been to run the train into the Iowa river as the latter approached the long bridge over the stream. The engineer observed a misplacement of the rail on the right side a few lengths west of the bridge, and managed to bring the train to a full stop before reaching the structure. On investigation it was found that the spikes had been pulled from three rails, which would have been sufficient to throw the train into the river.

Belief of the Metlokahtla Indians.

The wild Indians of the northwest had some beliefs that paved the way for the reception of Christianity. In their legends they made frequent mention of the "Son of God," and he was always spoken of as a benefactor. They had also many remarkable legends about Satan, and his name in their language means "The Father of Liars." They believed him to be an avaricious being, always prowling around seeking something to satisfy his appetite, and full of deceit.

They had a firm belief in a future existence. The Indian word for "death" does not convey the same idea as it does in English. It is the equivalent of "espasated," or parted into two, as a rope that has been broken by being subjected to too much strain. They said of an Indian who had just died that he "had parted," "had separated." They had a tradition, also, that earth and heaven were in close proximity to each other, so that everything that was said in heaven could be heard upon the earth, and all the noises of the earth were distinctly heard in heaven. Finally the children of men on earth became so turbulent and caused such a racket that the chief in heaven could not sleep, and so he just took the earth and pitched it as far as it now is from heaven.—Z. WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 9, 1887.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

BENEVOLENT societies, such as those which are in existence and flourishing in Peterborough, can scarcely be called secret societies. Their officers, aims and methods of working are known to the public, and the uninitiated may become as familiar with the general principles and the main work of the orders as a Noble Grand, a Chief Ranger, or a Master Workman, if he so desires. Their increase in membership, their expenditure in assisting their brethren or families of brethren and for paying death claims, and other particulars of the transactions of the lodges and courts are published, and their constitutions and by-laws are not hid from those who are not members. To call societies so constituted secret societies does seem to be misapplying terms. It is true that they have secrets which they are bound not to divulge. They have words by which members are known and intruders are kept out of their meetings, and signs of recognition by which members can communicate to other members the fact that they belong to the order. None but the initiated know what is said in a meeting to impress the members with the principles of the orders, neither can an outsider understand the symbols which are connected with the societies. But these, when the principles and objects of a society are known, are not matters of importance to the public.

That benevolent societies have done much good is evident to all. Many who would not otherwise have provided for accidents or sickness have felt the benefit of belonging to a society that assists the afflicted. Many have been aided by the visitations and care of their brethren, and strangers have frequently had cause to be thankful that the society sign and word were a guarantee of character and were sufficient, where they were entirely unknown, to call to their bedside those who would minister to them in sickness. Many a family, bereaved and in grief, has been saved additional trouble by the system which provides for timely aid when the chief support of the family is taken away. It is true that it is the duty of everyone to care for the afflicted. But, as society is constituted, this is not always done, and benevolent societies, properly conetituted and carried on, are simply bodies of men methodically organized to perform such duties.

To call such societies by the same name as societies whose places of meeting are hid, whose officers and members are unknown, who strive to conceal their every act and even to screen the fact of their existence, is very much like using terms indiscriminately. A secret society is generally or always dangerous; a benevolent society does good.

A large-hearted philanthropist might hope to see all mankind united into one vast brotherhood, when everyone would be ready to act the part of the good Samaritan when an opportunity offered, and none should do otherwise than assist in forming such a magnificent union; but the hope that the time will come when no one will delay to enquire, "Who is my neighbor?" should not deter the organization of those who are willing to band themselves together for benevolent work or mutual assistance.

THE INDIANS.

PERHAPS no question was more vigorously dealt with during Dominion election campaign last winter than the treatment of the Northern Indians, and the grossest misrepresentation was indulged in on the subject. Wholesale charges of misconduct, unsupported by direct charges, were made against Indian agents, and the official reports were mutilated, misrepresented, and quotations given professedly from them but which they did not contain, in an endeavor to make out a case for illtreatment of the Indians against the Government. In June last, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met in Winnipeg, and a committee was appointed, with the Rev. Dr. Wardrope as convener, to visit as many Indian reserves as they could, and Dr. Wardrope publishes in the Knox College Monthly for August an article on what they said, in which he says:—

"The committee appointed by the Assembly are satisfied that all is being done by the Government for the welfare of the Indians that could reasonably be expected. Choice land has been assigned them for their reserves, and the Indian agents and farm instructors seem to be men well qualified, in every point of view, for the important work assigned them. Pleasing testimony is borne, by men able to judge, as to the advancement of the Indians in industry and ability to work."

This is important evidence of the groundlessness of the charges made against the Government, and the agents appointed by the Government. Everything is being done for the welfare of the Indians that "could reasonably be expected," and the agents and farm instructors are "well qualified, in every point of view, for the important work assigned them." These agents and instructors are the men who were so vilely abused by Reform speakers last winter, the men who were styled "dudes" and were said to be incompetent and immoral. The visits of the committee put to rest, if anything further was needed for that purpose, another of the Reform calumnies. Even the Globe practically admits that. Its pretence that the statements of the Reformers brought about such a sweeping charge is too shallow to be considered seriously, while its admission that the state of things is vastly different from what the Reformers described it, is practically dropping that line of attack on the Government.

The Reform "platform" is falling to pieces. Opposition to the National Policy was dropped by Mr. Blake (though Mr. Laurier seems inclined to take it up again), the party has shown that its attacks on the Canadian Pacific railway were hollow pretences and the Indian illtreatment bubble is effectually pricked. With these experiences the people will be still less inclined to trust that party.

ON the same day as the Reformers lost South Renfrew the Reform member for Yarmouth, N. S., Mr. John Lovitt, lost his seat on account of bribery. Money was very plentiful among his agents during the contest. The evidence taken in the court showed that it was handled in hundreds of dollars, and five, seven, eight dollars and other sums were freely paid for votes. For those who could be influenced in another way to adopt "Reform principles" cases of liquor were stored in a cellar and sent out to satisfy the thirsty. The taking of evidence was cut short by Mr. Lovitt throwing up the sponge and relinquishing his claim to the seat. The "party of purity" in Yarmouth showed the same partiality to bribery as it has done in other places. In fact they are not only partial to bribery as means of securing votes; they Lovitt.

ADVOCATES of Commercial Union are fond of referring to the high prices received by farmers in Canada at the time the reciprocity treaty was in force. But the farmers know that war had more to do with their receiving good prices at that time than reciprocity. The Hamilton Spectator quotes the prices of farm produce in 1861, when the treaty was in operation and before the war commenced, and those of this year, which show that the farmers did not receive higher prices in consequence of reciprocity than they now receive.

THE Brockville Recorder professes to see in the statement that rings control the price of anthracite coal and that they did not lower it in Canada when the duty was removed, an argument in favor of commercial union. It is welcome to all the comfort it can draw out of the argument.

The German Flag in Africa.

The German flag now floats over fourteen white stations, and a district twice as large as Prussia today admits the sovereignty of Emperor William; but the German pioneers have secured for their country still further advantages. In the recent treaty between Germany and England the immense region between Victoria Nyanza and Kilima-Njaro on the north, and Nyassa and the Rovuma river on the south, and from the Indian ocean west to Tanganyika, is designated as the zone of German interests into which England agrees not to intrude. This vast domain joins the Congo independent state, and together they form a wide belt across the continent from sea to sea, in which hundreds of white men are now striving with all their might to find what benefits equatorial Africa may be made to confer upon the world.

These Germans have in view a broadly conceived and clearly defined plan, whose practicability it is their first purpose to test thoroughly. It is their belief that large plantations for the culture of cotton, tobacco, sugar, rice and other products may be developed on these uplands with the aid of native labor, and that when means of communication with the coast have been perfected a large amount of capital may find profitable employment. All their stations are scenes of agricultural activity and training schools for native workmen. About 600 acres are in crops, practical farmers and gardeners are experimenting with all the tropical and European grains, vegetables, fruits and nuts, the stables are filled with cattle, goats, asses and fowls and several hundreds of workmen, whose native systems of irrigation and many herds and fields show that they are not wholly lacking in skill and industry, are being trained in white methods of manual labor. Thus the German East African society is striving to open new fields for home enterprise, to instruct and elevate the natives, and it is not without hope that some portions of its domain may prove to be adapted to the needs of German colonists—New York Sun.

Salt a Cure for Falling Hair.

"I am very glad of the opportunity given me by the query to thank 'Notes and Queries' for the recommendation of dry salt as a cure for falling hair. My hair had come out frightfully for several months, so that I dreaded touching it with a brush. Thinking that salt could do no harm, anyway, and remembering the benefit always derived from sea air and bathing, I tried it, and was surprised at the result, for after three applications—putting it on at night and brushing and shaking out in the morning—not one hair came out with the most vigorous brushing. I have used it three or four times a week since the middle of November, and notice a perceptible thickening of my hair and no disagreeable results whatever. The treatment might not be so beneficial to every one, of course, but I have written this fully, feeling that I could hardly say too much in praise of what has been so successful with myself."—Boston Transcript.

Death Rate Among Children.

The following facts are suggestive: Full one-third of the patients of the general practitioner are children. Of all children born about one in five dies within the first year, and one in three by the end of the fifth year. In New York about one-half die in five years. It is with little children as with extreme old age, they are very liable to be sick, and their sickness to prove fatal. Of those who die within the first year 40 per cent. die of digestive troubles, and about 19 per cent. die of respiratory affections. During this second year this order is reversed, about 39 per cent. dying of respiratory and only 9 per cent. of diseases of the bowels.—Philadelphia Times.

PLANNING AN ESCAPE.

PLOT OF LIBBY PRISON'S INMATES TO CAPTURE RICHMOND.

Help from a Brave Union Woman—Co-Operation from Washington—The Plans Well Laid—How the Scheme Was Defeated at Last.

We opened correspondence with the notorious Abbey Green, a brave Union woman living in the city, noted for her outspoken patriotism and the bravery with which she approached the columns of Federal prisoners, where, despite the bayonets of the guards, she gave what relief she could, often tossing loaves of bread to them at the peril of life.

The noble woman gave relief and cheering words to thousands, and bravely staid in Richmond, known to and feared by the rebels, whom she defied. If there was a plot to execute, she was the one to co-operate. So we opened correspondence with her through a faithful colored boy on menial duty at the prison. We carefully stated our desires, and in return received a plan of the city and location of the arsenal, a correct statement of the number of troops in the city, the strength of the home guard and all other information needed.

After the plans were matured all prisoners willing to co-operate were formed into battalions and companies, and drilled as carefully and frequently as possible. Everything that could be was converted into a weapon, and several pistols and bowie knives had been received among the contents of the boxes first delivered to us before an examination was required, and these we had kept well concealed, and they would help greatly in our strike for freedom. A few weapons in the hands of desperate leaders would do bloody work.

In order to make our plot a success, it was deemed necessary to inform the government at Washington, and get, if possible, its aid. A fine opportunity of doing this occurred when the surgeons were released. Statements of our plans were written on very fine paper, and this folded up tightly was concealed in the staff buttons of their uniforms, which were constructed so that the heads of the buttons could be removed, showing quite a space capable of holding a large piece of fine paper. The button heads on being replaced gave no evidence of the valuable deposits beneath. Thus we succeeded in informing Mr. Lincoln and the secretary of war of our intentions.

A cabinet meeting decided the plans so submitted perfectly feasible, and preparations were at once made to aid us, and an officer was sent down to the peninsula to draw the Confederate forces all out of the city to repel him in his supposed attempt to enter Richmond. He did so, and we saw from the windows of Libby the Confederates march by to meet him. There were left only about 300 home guards. Our plan was to assemble on a certain evening in the lower middle room, burst open the front doors, seize the guards in front, disarm them, and with the arms so gained intimidate and take prisoners the officials of Libby, then march to the arsenal, fighting the home guard if encountered on the way, and, with the arms in the arsenal, we would march to Belle Isle, and, arming the prisoners there, march back, an army of 6,000 strong. We could then easily have taken possession of and held Richmond against any force until Gen. Butler, marching up, would have re-enforced us, and the city would have been ours.

Our plans, as we supposed, were well laid, and everything in regard to their successful completion progressed as favorably as we could desire up to the very evening of the night on which we determined to make our exit. From the windows we observed, about 5 o'clock p. m., a "jackass battery," as it was derisively styled, being located in front of Libby, and a greatly increased guard put on duty, while a company of the home guards stood in front.

Presently Maj. Turner, with a squad, ascended the stairs, and in a loud tone announced the order that all prisoners were to descend to the lower middle room. Not dreaming of the trap about to be sprung on us, and thinking there was to be an inspection of some kind, we obeyed the order without reluctance, there being no necessity for guards to enforce it with the points of their bayonets, as they seemed inclined to do at the least hesitancy to march forward quickly. When all were below guards were stationed at the head of the stairs, and we were told it would be perilous to attempt to come up until ordered to do so.

Hour succeeded hour, and darkness set in; still we received no intimation of release, and at last the truth began to dawn upon our bewildered understandings. We were prisoners in a twofold sense in Libby, and under close surveillance, in one of the rooms. What did it mean? Had some one turned traitor and disclosed our plot? If such a one had been known he would have been thrown a corpse from the windows or torn to pieces, but we could not fully realize that such had been the case. Our plan was nipped, but we could try it again. We were kept in the room described several hours and then released and permitted to occupy our accustomed places, but we found our rooms had been thoroughly ransacked and everything in the shape of a weapon taken. Evidently our plot had been disclosed and frustrated. Our privileges were fewer afterwards, and a closer watch was had over our actions. The outside guards were increased, and so much vigilance manifested that we concluded not to make our attempt for a time at least.

The manner in which the prison officials were made cognizant of our plans was for a long time a mystery. The generally accepted solution of the problem was that some one of our number had sold us out. I never knew the true cause until after the war. I met one day in Washington city Capt. Jackson Warner, described before as the quartermaster who furnished us beef and bread. I asked Capt. Warner the question. He said he remembered the occasion well and what excitement it caused. When a spy, who had for a long time been among us, dressed in similar uniform, to report our sayings and doings daily or weekly, as was deemed fit, announced that we had formed a plan to escape, he was instructed to watch closely and report progress, which he could easily do, for we talked and planned without secrecy. Like a cat playing with the mouse, they played with us, and when tired, and just at the proper time, came down in force.—Dr. John Henry, Fifth Ohio cavalry.

A Big New York Restaurant.

There is a cheap restaurant in New York that feeds 8,000 people a day! It is never closed, night nor day, and has three different relays of waiters, cooks, cleaners, cashiers and other hands. It is not noted in the city, but is famous in all the country towns and villages in this state, New Jersey and Connecticut, which are its chief source of patronage. How many reservoirs of soup and how many tons of beef it consumes daily are matters for the consideration of metropolitan correspondents of country newspapers. But the figures are astounding and interesting without sensational elaboration.—Good Housekeeping.

THE BIG NEWSPAPER.

HAS THE LIMIT OF THE READERS' PATIENCE BEEN REACHED?

The Newspaper of the Future May be Smaller Than the Present Average. Condensation in the Judicious Sense. The Pictorial Practice.

When the big newspaper becomes still bigger how is it to be delivered? Newsdealers and carriers have already complained of the hardness of the task of handling so many pounds of paper. How will it be when still more pounds are added? Why, it will be impossible, certainly at the prevailing low rates. The days of the cheap press will be passed. The price must be very considerably increased to induce the middlemen to dispose of Mr. Jones' larger sheets and more of them.

The newspaper of the future will be smaller instead of larger than the present average. And it will be no worse a newspaper on that account, but rather better. This result will be reached by condensation in the judicious sense. I don't mean by this "boiling down everything," so that there is little of spirit or substance left in the article or paragraph, or anything much but the heading. The process to which I refer is condemation by exclusion. The newspaper of the future will publish only what it is really worth while to publish. The newspaper of the present prints a vast mass of matter upon which space is wasted, which nobody is profited by reading or actually wants to read, or having read recalls a moment later. If all of this were omitted the newspaper would shrink rapidly.

IN OTHER DEPARTMENTS.

But it is not only the literary department that condensation is advantageously practicable. The commercial department is as inviting a field. I doubt that the present system of advertising will be in operation in 1987, or even in 1937. An illustration will point the case. If all the newspapers in New York should agree to double their advertising rates, and if in consequence the advertisers should buy half as much space as heretofore, it is, of course, mathematically demonstrable that the newspapers would be no worse off pecuniarily. I think it is morally demonstrable that the advertisers would be no worse off in respect to the publicity of their business, but that all hands by and by would be a great deal better off in every way.

The advertisement would attract very nearly as much attention. It would get quite as much if the advertisers agreed to stand upon a level. It is the competition in magnitude—the struggle for a longer announcement and for bigger letters, the enormous alphabetical blotches which disfigure so many daily journals—that characterizes the system. Then there is another sort of competition within the paper itself, between the literary and commercial columns.

THE PICTORIAL PRACTICE.

Mr. Ottendorfer says: "I think the habit of presenting illustrations in such journals is foolish and is very bad taste." I certainly agree with him; but if we should trace the genesis of the pictorial practice might we not find that it originated in part in a supposed necessity for an offset to the black, street poster letters of the advertisements? There was, perhaps, a disposition to restore the balance between the departments, and to do it bloated headings, monstrous "cuts" and diffuse padding of all sorts were resorted to. This policy of the literary half in turn stimulates the commercial half to fresh efforts.

If journalism could recover from this madness of magnitude the two sides would still act and react upon each other, but in a more wholesome way. Both would learn that there are effective opportunities in compactness of space and moderation of statement. It seems to me that the hope of journalism lies in some such reform as this. Otherwise its fate threatens to resemble that of an overgrown, gigantic vegetable, not nutritious, but running to useless pulp and unproductive seed.

I think the newspaper of the future will have smaller pages and fewer of them. The tendency almost everywhere seems away from the blanket form.—Cor. Brooklyn Eagle.

Cookery in the South.

It has been the habit of some to speak and write slightingly of cooking in the south. The itinerant journalist travels through a southern state, stops at a railway station, buys a cup of badly prepared coffee and a sour roll, or hastily boils a wretchedly cooked dinner; jots down his unfortunate experience in his notebook, and at his next sleeping place writes his letter to the northern daily or weekly; graphically portrays the barbarities of southern cooking, and would almost persuade his readers that he is journeying in a land outside the pale of civilization. The man who keeps the eating house may be, like himself, a stranger to the south, stopping there only for the purpose of making money; or he may be as inefficient as some who preside at similar houses in the north, since even there a railway station dinner is not often the most tempting meal to a discriminating palate.

But the mind of the journalist is in no mood to appreciate conditions; he must seize upon facts. During his journey he has not, perhaps, entered one southern home, has not been once seated at a family table. With the capricious gods of the station and the saloon he has had some dealings, but the lares and penates of the southern fireside have neither welcomed him nor revealed themselves to him. What, then, does this Munchausen know of southern cooking and southern tables?—Zitella Cocke in American Magazine.

The Cramp of Swimmers.

People are drowned by an attack of cramp because of the terror accompanying it, when the arms are invariably thrown up over the head—a sure way of going to the bottom. I teach even little children, from 5 years up, to propel themselves through the water with one hand only, or one foot, or with hands or feet alone, and through familiarity with such movements, if an attack of cramp should overtake the swimmer, she will be prepared for the emergency and keep cool until a landing is effected, when a vigorous rubbing of the cramped muscles will make matters all right.—Kate Bennett in Herald of Health.

A Porter at the Door.

At all of the leading hotels of London there is a uniformed porter at the door. If there are one or two inside doors, you will find a porter in uniform at each one of them. At the elevator often stands a porter in the uniform of a chasseur. You will find at every turn and bend in any great London hotel a gayly uniformed servant, ready to step across your path and insist upon helping you in the most trivial way, but expecting always in return for each act a sixpence.—London Cor. New York World.

Reform is Needed.

Professor F. A. Marsh, of Lafayette college, ex-president of the Philological association, in pleading for a reform of "English spelling, says that we throw away $15,000,000 paying teachers for addling the brains of our children with bad spelling, and at least $100,000,000 more paying printers and publishers for sprinkling our books and papers with silent letters.—The Epoch.

M. Coquelin divides actors into two classes—those who identify themselves with their characters, and those who identify their characters with themselves.

The boy who expects to set the world on fire will never do it by smoking cigarettes. He will simply burn out his own energies.—Baltimore American.

CARLETON ON FLIES.

Exhaustive Treatment of Their Peculiarities.

A fly is modest and unassuming. He may be able to twist his legs into hard knots, go to sleep upside down, waltz in midair, maintain one steady line of uproarious conduct for thirty-four days without drawing breath and perform other incredible feats of endurance and dexterity, yet he never blows about anything except a steak. He never obtrudes an opinion. However deep his conviction on any subject he only specks so—never is certain.

I awoke the other morning at daybreak. I had wrapped the drapery of my couch about me at 3 a. m., and had contemplated sleeping more than an hour, but just as morn drew the astral tapestry and Cyrus Field's milk wagon jarred the perfumed silences of Gramercy park, I emerged from the glory tissued canopy of my childish dreams greeted by three buoyant and companionable flies.

The oldest and most deliberate fly had ascended to the summit erected by my knees, and was still engaged in personal adornment. He gave his goggles a careful polish with his fore legs, balanced himself on his middle legs, braided his hind legs and unraveled them again with amazing rapidity. Then he gave himself a brisk rubbing down all over and cracked his heels in a sudden and ribald manner. He lifted his wings and scoured their interior with the ball of his toes, tied his central legs into a hard knot, untied them, curried himself gently on the side and indulged his head in a dry shampoo. Having limbered up by this massage, he tried his buzz, found it satisfactory, vaulted lightly into the air and took a musical turn about the room, inserting himself in my left ear at full speed, and dodging out with a mocking laugh just in the nick of time.

Fly paper is a mean invention which does grievous injury to the tender and confiding nature of a fly. Being moist and soft and sticky, it appeals to him as being something good to eat. Alighting he gets one foot mired and doesn't like it. Nothing but complete freedom of movement satisfies an American fly. He beats the air with his wings and fails to get loose. A happy thought strikes him. He uses the other hind leg to pry out the first, and gets that into trouble. Then he thinks if he puts down his two middle legs and pushes real hard, something will break loose. The experiment is a failure. He then yells for help, and other flies come to his rescue. They interlace legs and pull, but find the fly still fast. Then they roll him over on his back, thinking he may slide easier in that position, but he is anchored firmer than ever. Then they ask him to remain just where he is until after luncheon, and not get stuck up any more, and promise to wait until they will come back, and then they go off and forget all about him. He remains, feebly gesticulating with his two remaining legs, and finally gets tired and abandons himself to death. Subsequently the paper is thrown into the back yard, where a tomcat steps on it, and it takes him a week to comb the flies and pitch out of his fur.

A correctly built fly has 19,631 eyes, but he is lacking in foresight. During a prosperous season he will lay in a stock of 4,000,000 children, and yet not, if he can help it, will he leave them even so small a legacy as a piece of pie.

I earnestly trust that the able paper to be printed by the Royal society will do justice to the beautiful, home like and trustful disposition of the fly. I have often tried to do flies justice, but my efforts, combined with a wet towel, have always failed.

Flies have always taken a deep interest in even the smallest things I do. As I write, one fly is going over the page carefully for omissions in punctuation; four others are assisting the flow of ideas by whispering confidingly in my ear and playing tag on top of my head; a fifth is balanced on the butt of my pen, enjoying the slow ride across the lines and the occasional excursions to the inkstand, and the rest have discovered a bottle belonging to the office boy, and are deep in the cross eyed joys of a carouse.—Henry Guy Carleton in New York World.

His Oratory Was Appreciated.

While Senator Harris was speaking at Cynthiana the other day, a half intoxicated Irishman, who had crawled up on the rear of the platform, interrupted him several times with remarks that were not quite intelligible. Finally Mr. Harris turned to the man and said:

"Please don't interrupt me, my friend. I am not much used to public speaking, and if you want to talk I'll have to quit."

"Bless yez!" said the Irishman, "it's not after interruptin' ye I am. I'm only approvin' of what ye say. Faith, and I didn't know it was in yez to do as well as yer doin'."

The senator from Madison was completely knocked out by this speech, but he bowed his thanks to the Hibernian, and joined heartily in the laughter which the latter's response had caused.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Cute Little Johnny.

A lady on Woodward avenue has a little boy who is inclined to freckle and has been told to keep on his hat when out in the sun. Last week she engaged a servant whose face is quite roughened with smallpox. Robbie looked at her very closely and then said to his mother:

"It's too bad, ain't it, mamma?"

"What's too bad?" said his mother.

"That her didn't keep on her hat."

His mother was puzzled and said: "Why should Mary keep on her hat?"

"'Cause the sun's jammed all her freckles in."—Detroit Tribune.

A Gentle Hint.

Omaha Husband—The theatre will be half over before we get started.

Young Wife—Well, I can't get these gloves buttoned.

"Don't see why you should be slow and awkward about a common thing like that."

"I never had a chance to practice before."

"Nonsense. Never had a chance to practice!"

"No, there were always plenty of young men around to do that for me, you know, dear."—Omaha World.

Objections to the Corset.

It is rather funny that there are no women in this world so healthy as the English women, and no women who lace so much. The French women and the American have naturally broader hips and smaller waists, so that much lacing is not required for them to gain the fashionable figure. But the English woman, with her narrow hips and broad shoulders, needs to make her waist smaller to achieve that which she desires, and yet where are there women who bring into the world a finer set of men than the English women? I think that is one of the very answers to the objections to the corset. The finest specimens, physically, of Englishmen are not what a clever girl called "tailor made," but to coin an expression, "mother made."—"Bab" in New York Star.

H. S. GRIFFIN & CO.

AN AGGRIEVED CITIZEN

He Pours His Woes Into the Ear of Bill Nye.

On board a day coach of the great trunk line running from the Battery via Sixth avenue to Harlem I fell in the other day with a highly cultivated old gentleman who now resides in Brooklyn. Together we enjoyed the delightful stretch of dark red scenery and advertisements which greets the enraptured eye along this great scenic route. Together we inhaled the thousand odors of hot, sour alleys and damp cellars, and together we looked into second story rooms where poverty lay panting in the awful heat that had accumulated all day and now shut down with the night like a stifling garment. In our conversation he said:

"I generally aim to let the papers alone if they'll let me alone, but when I first came here a friend of mine brought me a slip that he had cut out of a prominent morning paper in which my name was used in a way that made me mad; and so I went right down to the office of the paper. Before I went I told my wife about the piece and that I was going to see about it. She saw that I was excited and she became alarmed. She hung on to me quite a while and said she wished I wouldn't go. We had always got along so well, and since we had been married I had never killed anybody, and she wished I would take her advice and not go, but I was thoroughly indignant and mad. So I went down, and at the counter I asked to see the editor.

"The young man at the window where I went was counting the words in a 'Want' advertisement, and it was a long time before I could get his eye. Then he said in a brief, cold way that the editorial rooms were on the fifth floor. I did not like his way, and I would have been glad to lick him if I could have got over into his cage, but I couldn't. Then I went to the elevator. I was going to get in, but the elevator boy, who weighed about nineteen pounds, put his hand against my person and gently pushed me out.

"'You can't go upstairs without stating your name and your business and who you want to see. Here is a card that you can fill out.'

"He said I would have to be explicit. If I wanted the city editor, or the marine editor, or the literary editor, or the polo editor, or the birth and death editor, or the scrapping editor, I would find them in; but the managing editor and the telegraph editor and the night editor and the mirth editor and the bathing editor were all out.

"Finally I went in and found a small, good natured man that I could have handled without any trouble, but when I stated my business he said that it was not in his line at all, but that I ought to go to the city editor. By that time the city editor had gone to lunch. I waited for him till I got so hungry myself that I thought I would fall apart.

"When he came he had about nineteen men to talk to all at once for an hour or so; then he let me in and I told him what the trouble was. He didn't remember any such story in the paper as I spoke about, but would find out about it and see what reporter handed it in. Meantime he would advise me to write out a statement of my side of the case and leave it there. He would investigate the matter when the reporters got in in the evening.

"I went to a long table and wrote most all the afternoon on a piece which was not so scathing when I got through with it as I thought it was going to be, so I tore it up. Then I wrote another one. It was quite bitter, but not so bitter as I wished it had been. It had tame places in it where it seemed to all flatten out and fail to get there. I never suffered mentally so much in my life, and now and then when I wiped my brow on the tail of my linen coat I could see that the city editor seemed to enjoy it. By dusk I had completed an article that was carefully written, and yet I did not expect that it would be copied very much. It was inclined to be ornate in its style, and still there were words in it like 'egregious,' for instance, that I didn't feel sure I had spelled right. It was now night, and I went home, leaving my article for the morning paper and feeling proud that I was getting mixed up with literature.

"My wife was anxious to find out if I had anybody's gore on my hands before I went into dinner, but I convinced her that my heart was still pure and guiltless, but that I had written a piece for the paper that would stir up the town in the morning.

"I looked it through hurriedly but didn't find my piece. Most everything else was there but that, however. It was crowded out. Probably the mush and milk sociable editor had a piece that he wanted to run in place of it, and owing to his influence he had succeeded. I was greatly irritated. I had lost one day from my business, but I decided to go down to the office again and see what the matter was.

"This time I got to the city editor at once, and he said if I would write another statement he would promise that it should not be overlooked, and said that as I was cooler now I would no doubt write a better piece. So I was fool enough to write another flapdoodle card for the paper. It took me till 12:30, and as near as I can remember simply proved over my own signature that I was an ice cream man who aspired to be a large, straw colored jackass. When I took it in to the city editor he asked me if I had the slip cut from the paper to which I referred. I produced it. He looked it over a moment, and then he said:

"'I am sorry that you have been here for two days and sprained your Thinker over this matter, and absorbed your time preparing an exhaustive article for our paper in your defense, for this slip is cut out of some other paper. I don't know what paper it is, but we haven't got any such type as that in our office.'

"He then stated that he would not detain me any longer, and I don't believe he could if he had wanted to. I went down the stairs rather than meet the elevator boy again, and soon found myself on the street. I bought my wife a new dress on the way home, and told her I had thought better of my assassination scheme on her account.

"That was ten years ago," said the old man, as he arose to go, "and although I have not always done right, I can truly say that the gore of no newspaper man is on my hands."
—New York World.

Willing to Take Anything Else.

"Hanging is too good for you," said a judge to a condemned man. "I know it is," replied the prisoner frankly; "and if you can suggest anything else, judge, you can't do it too quick."—Drake's Magazine.

The Picnic.

A Texas poet sums up a picnic as follows:

Pies and sighs and flies,
Many an urchin whacked,
Trees and breeze and sneeze,
And many a chestnut cracked,
Cakes and lakes and snakes,
Some water and sour looks,
Dresses and screams and dreams,
Black ants and sweetbooks.

A PIN.

Oh, I know a certain woman who is reckoned with the good,
But she fills me with more terror than a raging lion would.
The little chills run up and down my spine when-
e'er we meet,
Though she seems a gentle creature and she's very trim and neat.

And she has a thousand virtues and not one acknowledged sin,
But she is the sort of person you could liken to a pin.
And she pricks you, and she sticks you, in a way that can't be said—
When you seek for what has hurt you, why, you cannot find the head.

But see fills you with discomfort and exasperating pain—
If anybody asks you why, you really can't explain.
A pin is such a tiny thing—of that there is no doubt—
Yet, when it's sticking in your flesh, you're wretched till it's out!

She is wonderfully observing—when she meets a pretty girl
She is always sure to tell her if her "bang" is out of curl.
And she is so sympathetic: to her friend, who's much admired,
She is often heard remarking, "Dear, you look so worn and tired!"

And she is a careful critic, for on yesterday she eyed
The new dress I was airing with a woman's natural pride,
And she said, "Oh, how becoming;" and then softly added, "it
Is really a misfortune that the basque is such a fit."

Then she said, "If you had heard me yestereve, I'm sure, my friend,
You would say I am a champion who knows how to defend."
And she left me with the feeling—most unpleasant, I aver—
That the whole world would despise me if it had not been for her.

Whenever I encounter her, in such a nameless way
She gives me the impression I am at my worst that day.
And the hat that was imported (and that cost me half a sonnet)
With just once glance from her round eyes becomes a Bowery bonnet.

She is always bright and smiling, sharp and shining for a thrust—
Use does not seem to blunt her point, nor does she gather rust.
Oh! I wish some hapless specimen of mankind would begin
To tidy up the world for me, by picking up this pin.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in The Century.

What He Had in His Basket.

He was one of those long, thin, dried up fellows, with a parchment skin and sharp eyes, and a sharp nose, who are always prying into things. It was on the Saucelito boat, and a fellow came on board with a basket and sat down near him. There was something very important in the basket, for the fellow kept peering in all the time and looking to see if the lid was securely fastened. The sharp nosed man began to feel an interest, and his curiosity kept rising higher and higher, until when the fellow had peeped into the basket for the fiftieth time he couldn't stand it any longer.

"I beg your pardon, but you're so interested in that basket you really excite me. What have you got in it?"

The fellow looked at him a moment.

"I'll tell you, certainly. You won't give it away?"

"I give you my word."

"Well, it's a mongaroo."

"A mongaroo! And what is a mongaroo?"

"You don't know what a mongaroo is? A mongaroo is an animal found in Africa that lives entirely on snakes."

"And how are you going to get snakes for it to eat?"

"Oh, you see I'm taking it to my brother. He's a confirmed drinker, and"——

"But I don't see"——

"Well, he's always seeing snakes and I'm going to"——

"But how can this animal live on imaginary snakes?"

"Oh, this is an imaginary mongaroo."

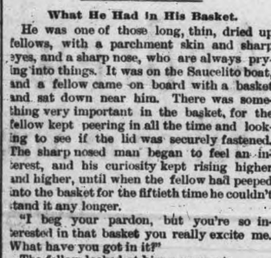
Then the sharp nosed man went into the cabin and sat down opposite a girl who is supposed to be in Saucelito for change of air, but comes over here four days out of the week.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Power of Imagination.

A lawyer driving along a country road asked a woman who was walking in the same direction which way he had to turn to reach B——. The woman gave him directions and added that she was going in that direction and would point out the way. "All right, good woman," said the lawyer, "jump up; better bad company than none." After jogging some miles further the woman descended and thanked him for the drive. "Have I much further to go ere I reach the B—— road?" asked the limb of the law. "Oh, you passed it some two or three miles back," was the answer, "but as I thought bad company better than none I brought you on."—Unidentified.

"Tip 'Em a Little Latin."

"Yes," said Mr. Mally sadly, "I lost my case—lost it by the injudicious language of my lawyer, Mr. Lally."



"Why, how was that, Mr. Mally?"

"Why, when my lawyer was closing his argument he thought to make a good point by saying: 'Let justice be done though the heavens fall.'"

"I shouldn't think that would have injured your case."

"It did, for the lawyer on the other side in closing said: 'Fiat justitia, ruat cælum.' That settled the business with the jury, and I had to pay damages."—Boston Courier.

Twenty beaux in fine clothes
Wooed Miss de la Manches.
Her old dad ducats had—
Stocks, mines, railroads, ranches.

One fine day passed away
All De Manches' rhino;
Not a beau came, ah no,
Save Paul Pencil Shino.

Reportaire—inky hair—
Was this constant lover.
Manches' gold once more rolled.
Paul now munches clover.

A Negro Uprising in Pittsburg.

"There was a negro uprising on Wylie street this morning," remarked the judge.

"Was there?" asked the major.

"Yes, at least I suppose there was, for as I came down I heard a colored woman scream: 'Yo thar, George Washington Snow, ef you don't git right up yo won't git no breffus.'"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGAR

Then as 1886 the 6th came. There was a great flashing of light before her eyes, and the roaring as of a thousand seas within her ears, and her head sank gently on her lover's breast as on a pillow; and there she died and passed upward toward the wider life and larger liberty, or perchance downward into the depths of an eternal sleep.

Poor dark eyed, deep hearted Jess! This was the fruition of her love and this her bridal bed.

It was done. She had gone, taking with her the secret of her self sacrifice and crime, and the night winds moaning amid the rocks sang their requiem over her. Here she first had learned her love, and here she closed its book.

She might have been a great and good woman. She might even have been a happy woman. But fate had ordained it otherwise. Women such as she are rarely happy in the world. It is not well to stake all one's fortune on a throw and lack the craft to load the dice. Well, her troubles are done with. "Think gently of her" and let her pass in peace.

The hours grew on toward the morning, but John, the dead face of the woman he had loved still pillowed on his breast, neither dreamed nor woke. There was a strange and dreadful irony in the situation, and one which sometimes finds a counterpart in our waking life, but still the man slept and the dead woman lay till the night turned into the morning and the world woke up as usual. The sunbeams slid into the cave and played indifferently upon the ashen face and tangled curls and on the broad chest of the living man whereon they rested. An old baboon peeped round the rocky edge and manifested no surprise, only indignation, at the intrusion of humanity, dead or alive, into his dominions. Yes, the world woke up as usual, and recked not and troubled not because Jess was dead.

It was so accustomed to such sights.

And at last John woke up, too. He stretched his arms and yawned, and then for the first time became aware of the weight upon his breast. He glanced down and saw dimly at first—then more clearly.

There are some things into which it is wisest not to pry, and one of them is the first agony of a strong man's grief.

Happy was it for him that his brain did not give way in that first lonely hour of bottomless despair. But he lived through it, as we do live through such things, and was sane and sound after it, though it left its mark upon his life.

Two hours later a gaunt, haggard figure came stumbling down the hillside toward the site of Mooifontein, bearing something in his arms. The whole place was in commotion. Here and there were knots of Boers talking excitedly, who, when they saw the man coming hurried up to see who it was and what he carried. But when they knew they fell back awed and without a word, and he, too, passed through them without a word. For a moment he hesitated, realizing that the house was burned down, and then turned into the wagon shed and laid his burden down upon the saw bench on which Frank Muller had sat as judge upon the previous day.

Then at last he spoke in a hoarse voice, "Where is the old man?" One of them pointed to the door of the little room.

"Open it!" he said, so fiercely that they again fell back and obeyed him without a word.

"John! John!" cried Silas Croft. "Thank God you have come back to us from the dead!" and, trembling with joy and surprise, he would have fallen upon his neck.

"Hush!" he answered; "I have brought the dead with me."

And he led him to where she lay.

During the day the Boers all went and left them alone. Now that Frank Muller was dead there was no thought among them of carrying out the sentence upon their old neighbor. Besides, there was no warrant for the execution, even had they desired so to do, for their commandant had died leaving it unsigned. So they held a sort of informal inquest upon their leader's body, and then buried him in the little graveyard that was planted with the four red gums, one at each corner, and walled in on the hillside at the back of where the house had stood. Rather than be at the pains of hollowing out another they buried him in the very grave that he had caused to be dug to receive the body of Silas Croft.

Who had murdered Frank Muller was and remains a mystery among them to this day. The knife was identified by the natives about the farm as belonging to the Hottentot Jantje, and a Hottentot was seen running from the place of the deed and hunted for some way, but could not be caught or heard of again. Therefore many of them are of the opinion that he is the guilty man. Others, again, believes that the crime rests upon the shoulders of the villainous one eyed Kaffir, Hendrik, his own servant, who had also mysterously vanished. But as they have never found either of them, and are not likely to, the point remains a moot one. Nor, indeed, did they take any great pains to hunt for them. Frank Muller was not a popular character, and the fact of a man coming to a mysterious end does not produce any great sensation among a rough people and in rough times.

On the following day old Silas Croft, Bessie and John Niel also buried their dead in the little graveyard on the hillside, and there she lies, some ten feet of earth only between her and the man on whom she was the instrument of vengeance. But they never knew that, or even guessed it. They never even knew that she had been near Mooifontein on that awful night. Nobody knew it except Jantje, and Jantje, haunted by the footfall of the pursuing Boers, was gone from the ken of the white man far into the wilds of Central Africa.

"John," said the old man, when they had filled in the grave, "this is no country for Englishmen. Let us go home to England." John bowed his head in assent. Fortunately the means were not wanting, although they were practically ruined, for the £1,0 0 he had paid to Silas for a third interest in the farm still lay, together with another £250, in the Standard bank at Newcastle, in Natal.

And so in due course they went.

And now what more is there to tell? Jess, to those who read what has been written as it is meant to be read, was the soul of it all, and Jess is dead. It is useless to set a lifeless thing upon its feet, rather let us strive to follow the soarings of the spirit. Jess is dead and her story at an end.

One word more. After some difficulty John Niel, within three months of his arrival in England, got employment as a land agent to a large estate in Rutlandshire, which position he fills to this day, with credit to himself and such advantage to the property as can be expected nowadays. Also, he in due course became the beloved husband of sweet Bessie Croft, and on the whole may be considered a happy man. At times, however, a sorrow of which his wife knows nothing gets the better of him, and for a while he is not himself.

He is not a man much given to sentiment or speculation, but sometimes when his day's work is done and he strays down to his garden gate and looks out at the dim and peaceful English landscape below, and then at the wide star strewn heavens above, he wonders if the hour will ever come when he will once more see those dark and passionate eyes and hear that sweet remembered voice.

For he feels as near to his lost love now that she is dead as he did when she was yet alive, and from time to time he seems to clearly know that if there prove to be an individual future for us struggling mortals he will find Jess waiting to greet him at its gates.

THE END.

A SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

THE CAREER OF ONE OF PETERBOROUGH'S BUSINESS MEN.

A Clothier from His Youth Up—The Salaries He has Commanded—The Daring Advertising Schemes he has Carried Out—Live and go Ahead.

Among the business men of Peterborough, or, in fact, of the Province of Ontario, there are few who equal Mr. E. D. Gough, the clothier, in push and enterprise. On coming to Peterborough about a year and a half ago, he at once brought himself into prominence by his large advertising ventures and since then he has occupied a unique position in the business community. Those who wonder at the large trade he has so quickly built up, the immense amount of goods he disposes of, and the profuse, and to the uninitiated, the apparently reckless way in which he spends his money in advertising will find that all this is but the outcome of a training such as few have had added to great vigor in the management of his business. He has had not one which might be called full of vicissitudes; for his progress has been constant and rapid from the first. In 1870 the subject of this sketch commenced his business life in the Clothing House of Hughes Bro., Toronto. Here he laid the groundwork of after success. He worked patiently there, learning all he could learn, and when finding that he could command a better position he accepted it and became cashier in Mabley's, of Detroit, the largest clothing house on the continent. An idea of their business may be had from the fact that as big has $6,000 a day has been taken in sales. But though he distinguished himself there, he found that his natural aptitude drew him from the cash desk to behind the counter—he was a salesman. His ability was soon made manifest and he was engaged by the Boston One Price Clothing House as their manager in St. Paul at a salary of $1,800. He went to the northern metropolis and opened out the new branch. In a single year he won himself a high reputation and for his employers the largest trade of any of their branches in the west. His name was now well know in the trade. It was not long before a New York wholesale house was SEEKING AFTER HIM.

A REMARKABLE CAREER—

Exceptional inducements were offered to him and he accepted and closed the bargain. He got $1,800 a year and 2½ per cent. commission on all sales over $50,000 a year, besides $6 a day for travelling expenses. At the end of the year his sales amounted to the enormous amount of $180,000, his salary and commission going over $4,000. In 1883 he resolved to lead a batchelor's life no longer. He became a happy husband, and started business for himself. In the spring of 1886 he commenced business in Peterborough and unparalleled success have waited on his efforts. By the use of printer's ink and by special advertising of various kinds he has made himself the most prominent man in the Plate Glass City. Everybody remembers the day when he threw linen dusters by the score from the top of the Opera House to the swaying crowd below, and they will also remember what an enormous heap of pumpkins the prize overcoat brought to his establishment last fall. He is, however, going to make an announcement soon which will

CREATE A SENSATION.

He intends to offer a $5 gold piece to every male child born in the county and town of Peterborough during the present year on the condition of its being christened after the wonderful cheap man. He does not need to advertise just now as he is busy wholesaling. He has just returned from a two weeks' trip through the Province. The success of his wholesale trade is attested by the amount of packages arriving and departing from his headquarters in Peterborough and his branch store in Toronto, and by the volume of his banking transactions. Both of his establishments are spacious and well equipped. His headquarters here reaches 120 feet deep, having three stories and a basement. The shelves and tables are loaded with piles of the newest goods in the market. His George street establishment has a staff of seven competent salesmen all the year round, with an increased number during the busy seasons. His mode of buying, peculiar to himself, enables him to compete with the wholesale firms of the country, and at the same time give the people here their goods at manufacturers' prices. He can afford to pay the railway fare of people coming to Peterborough within a radius of 100 miles, provided they buy $12 worth of goods, and this he is doing right along. In order to keep pace with the demands of his retail trade, which has grown up and extended so widely, he will be obliged to lay in twice as heavy a stock as he ever carried before. He will commence making his fall announcements at an early date.

One of the ups and downs of an energetic merchant's existence is to keep the quality up and the price down. By the way, they are doing that at Sullivan's, selling beautiful Satin Merveilleux in all colors. M. Sullivan.

CANOEISTS IN CAMP

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NORTHERN DIVISION, A. C. A.,

Continuation of the Races—An Exciting Tournament at Headquarters—Illuminated Canoe Parade.

A. C. A. Camp, Juniper Island, Aug. 9.—Arrivals of members still continue, among them being Judge Dartnell of the Whitby Canoe Club.

The races were continued in the afternoon. The first was a combined race under sail and paddle alternately from buoy to buoy. The order was as follows:—

1st. W. A. Leys, Toronto C. C., Dawn.
2nd. C. Fraser, Ubique C. C., Una.
3rd. S. Britton, Lindsay C. C., Aurora.
4th. W. J. Read, Bobcaygeon C. C., Zela.
5th. J. G. Edwards, Lindsay C. C., Polly Ann.

There were seven other starters.

The second race was a tendem paddling race.

1st. W. Strickland, Lakefield C.C. } No No
H. S. Greenwood, S. M. C.C. } Moo Sha
2nd. H. F. McKendrick } N.C.C. } Enid.
J.N. McKendrick }
3rd S. Britton, } L.C.C. } Verena.
A. F. V. Macgachen. }
4th F. K. Fee, } L.C.C. } Petrel.
J. McMillan. }
5th K. Martin, } H.C.C. } Lucille.
W. J. White. } L. St. Louis C.C.

This was a well contested race and good time, the winners being 7 m. 3 sec. for the mile course.

The next race was a sailing race, "man overboard." The contestants sailed from the south buoy at Juniper Island and lowering sail went overboard on signal off Headquarters, getting into their canoes again as quickly as possible, set sail and finished at the buoy off Otter Island.

1st. H. F. McKendrick, U.C.C., Doubtful.
2nd. R. Tyson, T.C.C., Isabel.
3rd. S. Britton L.C.C., Aurora.
4th. W. A. Fraser, U.C.C., Enid.

There were eight starters. H. McKendrick was very quickly in his canoe and under sail again after going overboard, and others were almost as agile. Colin Fraser filled his canoe and after a manful struggle to employ it, which his draggle sail impeded, swam ashore. Burgess did not completely lower his sail and his canoe sailed away from him so that he could not overtake it.

The concluding event for the day was a tournament off Headquarters. There were two men in each canoe, one paddling and the other armed with a bamboo with a soft muffle on the end. With these spears the acquatic knights, charged up another as their paddlers propelled them at speed, each endeavouring to drive his adversary into water. The judges placed them as follows:—

1st. S. N. McKendrick, W. A. Fraser, } N. C. C.
2nd. W. J. Read, W. Boyd, } Bobcaygeon C.C.
3rd. Darcy Strickland, W. A. Lister, } Lakefield C.C.
4th. J. A. McMillan G. P. Martin } Lindsay, C. C.
5th. H. T. McKendrick, C. Fraser, } U.C.C.
6th. R. Tyson, R. Lees. } T.C.C. U.C.C.
7th. S. Britton, A. F. V. Macgachan. } Lindsay, C.C.
8th John Speer, Jas. Barr. } Lindsay, C.C.
9th. D. A. Gurgess, W. A. Leys. } U.C.C. T.C.C.
10th. A. I. Wright, G.W. Strickland. } Lakefield C.C.

A sight of this long continued contest would tend to modify the ideas of spectators as to the instability of canoes. Notwithstanding the shocks of well-directed thrusts it was seldom that the canoes were filled or the spearman dislodged. Only one went overboard at the first bout. Tyson and Darcy Strickland both in closed canoes charged each other repeatedly without much advantage on either side till the latter succumbed to a well aimed thrust. Read of Bobcaygeon, held his own manfully against all comers till J. McKendrick dislodged him fairly and ended the contest.

In the evening there was a very successful illuminated parade, which had been postponed several times on account of the weather. The camps and canoes were gaily ornamented with Chinese lanterns. The miniature fleet performed a variety of evolutions, passing among the islands on which the camps are situated, in line and single file. Sometimes the leader took a serpentine course, closely followed by each canoe in turn, with a very pretty effect. After some time thus spent the canoes locked together and many songs were sung till it was time to disperse.

Personal.

The Review had the pleasure of a call from Lieut. John R. Hooper, of the Ottawa Canton, and from Chevalier G. Lindsay, of the same Canton.

Mr. James Menzies, formerly of the Review office, is in town with the Ottawa Canton, of which he is a chevalier.

Mr. John A. Macdonald, of the Arnprior Chronicle, is in town and paid the Review office a call.

Worth Seeing.

Mr. Geo. E. Williams has made a fine album containing over one hundred views of Young Men's Christian Association buildings in Canada, the United States, Great Britain and other countries. The places in which these buildings are erected range in population from 2,000 to 5,000,000. Any person can see the album at the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

Collision.

The sudden puffing of steam at the Grand Trunk station on Tuesday, scared the horse drawing Mr. Harry Winch's meat cart. He plunged into Giles' green grocer cart and meat and vegetables were mixed up as promiscuously as an Irish stew. The boys driving the carts were hurt, but only slightly.

Brain Work

requires for its successful and pleasurable pursuit a full, uniform and continuous supply of pure, rich blood to the brain. If, through the torpidity of the liver, the blood becomes foul with bile, the brain is poisoned and overstimulated with the excess of blood which the irritated heart sends to it with frantic impulses. Dizziness, heaviness, loss of memory, impossibility of application to any kind of work, reveal the truth. To relieve this, and preserve not only the brain but the whole system in the best working order, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will be found invaluable.

One Way of Expressing It.

Says Harper's Bazar: "Our language is singularly deficient; we have no word to represent fiance or fiancee; 'my daughter's beau' is old fashioned; 'my daughter's young man' is very countrified; 'my daughter's lover' is scarcely a proper phrase; so we have to beat about the bush unless we adopt the French word." A Norristown youth doesn't experience the difficulty complained of by The Bazar. He calls him "that measly dude who's sweet on my sister," and lets it go at that.—Norristown Herald.

Pretty Near.

"Been any cases of sunstroke in town this week?" he asked of the boy who was shining his boots.

"Not quite, sir."

"Was some one almost overcome?"

"Yes, sir. See here. This is where me mother hit me over the head with a board, and for three minutes I didn't know east from west. I guess that's the closest shave anybody has had this week."—Detroit Free Press.

His Business Qualifications.

Father—Well, what can you say for the young man?

Daughter—He's young and handsome and has good business ability.

Father—How do you know anything about his business qualifications?

Daughter—Why, he has figured out for me time and time again how nicely we could get along if you would make us a present of $50,000.—Judge.

Courtesy to a Stranger.

Park Policeman (to a tired looking individual, asleep on one of the seats at the Battery)—Here, wake up. No sleeping allowed here.

Tired Looking Individual (bewildered and rubbing his eyes)—Since when was sleeping not allowed in Fairmount park?

Policeman—Ah! excuse me. I see you are from Philadelphia. Sleep away!—New York Sun.

Bound by Courtesy.

"Ah! I beg pardon, but your name is Gray?" he said as he met a man coming out of the postoffice.

"No, sir—no, sir—my name is not Gray."

"Oh—ah—it isn't, eh? Then I beg your pardon for begging your pardon."—Detroit Free Press.

A Camera in Danger.

"I suppose the usual crop of summer nuisances is showing up about here, Farmer Jones. Have you struck the amateur photographer yet?"

"Not yet; but I expect to. I've got a club ready for him."—Drake's Magazine.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

WAGES AND PROFITS.

THE report of the New York Bureau of Statistics shows that during the year 1885 there were in that State strikes in over 2,000 establishments, about half being successful, and that wage earners and wage payers lost over $5,000,000 by these contests. These figures show how serious is this matter not only for those immediately concerned but for the whole community.

There is one point as to the constant struggle between employers and employed that is not sufficiently considered. Who is it that obtains the benefit of low wages?

It seems to be generally assumed that the difference between low wages and fair remuneration goes into the pocket of the employer, and hence arises in a great measure the idea, sedulously fostered by the professional labor agitators (so strongly condemned by the N. Y. Labor Bureau) that there is an irreconcilable antagonism between "labor and capital."

Is it true that the benefit of low wages accrues to the employer? If we look around us in Canada we will find that there are few cases of employers of labor, who have made a large fortune out of their operations. Against these must be set the far greater number of those who have failed and have lost their investments, in some cases the accumulated savings of years of labor. Averaging these two classes with the great body, who have made a bare profit and have done little more than hold their own, it must appear on reflection that in Canada at least, employers of labor have not enriched themselves by paying too low wages. Admitting that there has been an insufficiency of wages, into whose pocket has the money gone?

Is it not obvious that it has gone into the pockets of the consumers? In almost every line of business competition is so keen, and this is especially the case in Canada, that the employer of labor, if the could lower wages fifty per cent at a word, would not retain a fraction of the profit arising from the reduction. To draw custom one rival would soon make a cut, another would do still better, till there would be nothing left for the general body except the smallest possible remuneration, the process sometimes not stopping short of bankruptcy. The consumer (including the wage earner when a purchaser) would have gained all the money retrenched from the wage fund.

In this aspect it will be seen that "labour and capital," so far from being antagonistic, have an identical interest to a certain point. It is a very important question as to the share in which the profit should be distributed, but before there can be any profit for distribution, it must be made or it cannot be divided.

If this is understood, it shows that arbitration would, in many cases, avoid the present wasteful contests, if the whole circumstances of the case were clearly considered. A partial or local strike, which would not effect outside competition, cannot be ultimately successful if an insufficient margin of profit is left. In such cases the local trade will be extirpated, as in the case of iron ship building on the Thames, which had to succumb to repeated strikes, because, wages not being similarly lowered on the Clyde, the business was transferred there. So if any other circumstances prevent the raising of prices, wages cannot be raised, except in the rare cases where there are excessive profits.

Low prices are, of course, a benefit to the consumer, but is it not an unrighteous benefit if it comes from screwing down the wage-earner? We may remark incidentally that low prices are not all net profit to the consumer, who is (as a majority are) also a wage-earner, nor even to him as a member of the community which must suffer with its suffering members.

If these facts are duly considered, they should soften the too bitter antagonism between labour and capital. They show that labour, capital and the whole community are jointly interested in maintaining sufficient profits to pay sufficient wages. They also point out what class of employer is really hostile to the interests alike of the wage-earner and the community; it is he who, from a grasping desire to draw custom, cuts down prices to the quick, till he has to sell either at the cost of his creditors, or of those he employs, whose fair remuneration he has curtailed that he may present it to the customers thus dishonestly obtained.

MR. FULLER, President of the Central Farmers' Institute, who by the way, is a lawyer, says that "unless we obtain commercial union inside of ten years, we will asking for annexation." Mr. Fuller may have intended this expression as the sentiment of Canadians generally, but no doubt he was speaking for himself and other leaders in the commercial union agitation. They might ask for annexation, but they would not obtain it in Canada. The people of Canada are patriotic and loyal, whatever a few noisy individuals may be, and a proposition for annexation straight would soon be voted out of sight, as would veiled political annexation under the guise of commercial annexation. Canada has prospered without such a union, and without reciprocity since 1866.

IT is argued that British connection is not an issue in the commercial union controversy because Canada adopted the National Policy. The National Policy did not discriminate against Great Britain and in favor of a foreign country, a difference commercial unionists try to keep in the background.

Picnic at Idyl Wild.

A picnic will be held at Idyl-Wild on Wednesday, August the 24th., in aid of the Roman Catholic Church at Harwood. A grand excursion on the steamer Golden-eye which is chartered for that purpose, will leave Peterborough at 7 a. m. sharp, and will start from Idyl-Wild to return at a convenient hour in the evening, so that a large attendance may be expected from town and neighbourhood. Other boats will leave Hastings, Keene and Harwood for the same destination. The great attraction will be a contest for a gold headed cane between Dr. C. Collins, of Peterborough and Dr. Edmonson, of Harwood. No doubt there will be a close contest between these two able young doctors and the Peterborough candidate should be well supported. There will be good music, excellent refreshments and a variety of amusements, which will make this one of the best picnics of the season. The Rev. Father Sweeney of Harwood, assisted by an energetic committee have have made all arrangements for the enjoyment of the day.

Victoria Rifles Band.

The Victoria Rifles Band gave another delightful concert in the P. A. A. A grounds on Wednesday evening. There were about a thousand people present. During the evening Lt.-Col. Unnerwood made a speech just suited to the occasion. His drollery put everybody in the best of humor. The band left on the 10.56 train, but previous to going serenaded the City Clothing Store.

I. O. O. F. Team Work.

There will be an exhibition of team work by the Toronto team under the management of Bro. W. H. Cogswell at the Opera House, Peterborough, at 8 o'clock sharp. Members of the Grand Lode ann all visiting brethern are cordially invited to attend.

Fire.

The Fire Brigade was called out at about eleven o'clock on Wednesday night. It was a small stable that was afire, situated near the market. The flames were soon extinguished.

THE GREAT FETE DAY.

THE CANTONS IN LINE—A BRILLIANT PAGEANT.

Scenes at the Driving Park—Presentation of Flags—Institution of Canton Peterbrrough—The Grand Lodge.

Wednesday was a great day in town. All the Cantons had arrived in town on Tuesday night accompanied with their bands, and quarters were assigned them at the Charlotte Street Rink.

At half past two o'clock in the afternoon the whole body of cantons militant made their appearance on the street and marched to the Central Park to meet the members of local lodges and Grand Representatives. As they marched with steady tread along thousands of eyes watched them from crowded sidewalks and windows. Their rich uniforms, the profuse decorations, the plumes waving in their hats keeping time to the music, the eager crowds, and the busy hackmen by the dozens taking people off to the park, formed a scene at once brilliant and novel. After marching to the Central Park the procession re-formed and came down George Street. Long before it started every available window, door step, and place of vantage, was occupied. The order of the procession was as follows:—

57th Battalion Band
Mounted Marshals.
Canton London, 31 swords. Officers, Capt Brown, Lieut. Riddel, Ensign Darch, Sargeant Abbott, Hospital Surgeon Anderson, Adjutant Stanley.
Newmarket Band.
Newmarket Canton, 31 swords. Officers, Capt. Atkinson, Lieut. Hughes, Ensign Brimson.
Canton Hamilton, 25 swords. Officers, Capt. Falkner, Lieut. Bolligan, Ensign Hutton.
Victoria Rifles Band.
Highland Pipers.
Canton Mount Royal, 21 swords. Officers, Capt. Briggs, Lieut. McLaughlin, Ensign Patterson, Clerk Read, Accountant Lorge and Standard-Bearer McGeown.
Belleville Band.
Canton Toronto, 35 swords. Officers, Capt. and Adjutant Lieut Stevens, Ensign Smith.
Canton Outaouias, 26 swords. Officers, Capt. Hood, Lieut. Hooper, Ensign Daniels, Staff Sergt. Parnell, Staff Sergt. Beeson, Staff Sergt. Ronan.
Members of Otonabee Lodge, No 13.
Members of Peterborough Lodge.
Members of Encampments.
Representatives to Grand Lodge.
Representatives to Grand Encampment.
Lieut.-Gen. Underwood and staff, consisting of Lieut.-Col. Jackson, Montreal, Major Happer, Belleville, and Major Head, Montreal.

The procession marched to the Driving Park and on the green sward enclosed by the half mile track the canton went through exhibition drill. The palm must be awarded to the London Canton. They went through their drill with such exactness as to draw from the crowd round after round of applause.

The features of the afternoon was the presentation of souvenir flags to the various cantons. The chevaliers were all drawn up in a long line with the captain one pace out from the ranks. Miss Daisy Hamilton, daughter of the Hon. R. Hamilton performed the pleasing duty of presenting the flags in a very graceful manner. Accompanied by councillor McNeil, who carried the flags for her, and by Lieut. Gen Underwood and staff, she visited each of the cantons and presented its captain with the trophy. Applause broke forth when it was seen what the gallant Montrealers had done. Before coming fiere they demanded that the handsomest young lady in Peterborough should present the flags, and when it was found that their demand was complied with all of the Chevaliers wanted to be captain for the afternoon.

When the captain received his trophy he in turn presented Miss Hamilton with a beautiful bannerette suitably inscribed, amid applause from the other cantons and the people.

After the drill the Peterborough Canton No. 10, was duly instituted with officers as follows:—Capt. A. McNeil, Lieut. Joseph Mills, Ensign, A. McFarlane, Clerk, R. J. Kidd and Accountant S. Clegg. The canton starts with a membership of 27. The oath was administered by the Lieut. General, the chevaliers kneeling on the grass to take it. After this Lieut. General Underwood addressed them on their various duties and finally pronounced Peterborough Canton duly instituted.

The Lieut. General then pronounced Lieut. Col. Jackson, of Montreal, to the full rank of Colonel. The Colonel was saluted by brother officers and chevaliers whose salute he replied to.

In the meantime the sports had been going on.

The mile bicycle race was the first event of the afternoon. There were three entries, Lingham, of Belleville, and Greatrix and Gibson, Peterborough. Lingham, went ahead at the start and won. Greatrix 2nd. Time 3 47 ¼. 1st prize a gold medal; 2nd a silver medal.

TROTTING RACE—1st HEAT.

The mile trotting race for a purse of $200 was the next event. The judges were H. Boat, Preston, J. A. Macdonald, Arnprior, Jas. Smith, London; Mr. R. W. Muncaster acted as time keeper. There was a field of nine horses. Which are as follows, in the order from the pole:—Black Diamond, Nellie Wood, Dan O'Connel, Mayflower, Royal Jim, Fanny B. Park, Little Ned. The big field got away at the second score, Dan O'Connel leading. He went easily along leading for the first three quarters when Park came out of the squad and disputed first place with Dan. Up the homestretch, it was nip and tuck but Dan won by a neck. Little ned third, Black Diamond 4th. Time 2.35.

FOOT RACE.

There were two entries for the half mile foot race—Rose and Carveth, both of Peterborough. Rose led all the way round and won easily. Time 2.12; prize, 1st a gold medal; 2nd a silver medal.

100 YARDS RACE.

There were four entries for this event Oliver, of Sunderland, won, and Arehie Moore, Peterborough, a good second in both heats. Time 12 seconds; prize, 1st a gold medal, 2nd a silver medal.

TROTTING RACE—2ND HEAT.

The second heat of the trotting race resulted the same as the first as far as first place was concerned. Dan won easily, Nellie Wood 2nd, Mayflower 3rd and Park 4th. Time 2.35½.

TROTTING RACE—3RD HEAT.

Dan O'Connel again came in ahead easily, Park 2nd, Royal Jim 3rd, Mayflower 4th. The summary is as follows:—

Dan O'Connel	1	1	1	1
Park	2	4	2	2
Nellie Wood	4	2	3	3

Purse $200; 1st money $100, 2nd. $60, 3rd $40. Time 2.35, 2.35½, 2.33.

DANCING.

In the Highland Fling there were two competitors, Riddel, of Montreal and Matthews, of Hamilton. Riddel won the Highland Fling and Matthews the sword dance. The dancing drew the attention of a large crowd of people.

FAT MANS' RACE.

In this event there were three entries. It was won by Mr. W. Bunting, town, without the customary toe-weights. He was greeted with cheers from the crowd.

CONSOLATION RACE.

The consolation 220 yard race was contested between Moore, Oliver and Rose. It was close between Moore and Oliver, the former winning.

NOTES.

Mr. R. M. Roy was busy taking photographic views during the afternoon.

The Belleville band gave a fine open air concert in the park during the afternoon.

The Hon. R. Hamilton, Dr. Halliday and Dr. Burnham were judges of the sports. Dr. Brennan was starter.

Travers and the English Orator.

It is due to Mr. William R. Travers that this country still retains the palm for oratory and volubility of speech. A few years ago a vaunting and loquacious Britisher had appeared in our midst to dispute the claim of the national cup in oratory, as Rowell had done for the belt in pedestrianism. It was in the yachting season, and the voluble champion was invited to accompany a party, of which Mr. Travers was the leading spirit, down the bay, in Mr. Travers' yacht. The orator had talked nearly everybody within earshot of his voice almost deaf. When the party arrived at the dinner table, it was hoped that he would cease for a short time, but when every other topic seemed exhausted, as well as the patience of his listeners, he started off with renewed fluency on the subject of oysters, which constituted the dish then at table.

"It is now a debatable point among scientists," he said, "as to whether or not the oyster has brains."

Travers, who up to this time had endured the infliction of his verbose guest with the calmness of Job, said: "I th—th—ink the oyster must have b—b—rains, because it knows enough when to shut up."

By this satiric stroke the English orator was dumfounded and almost paralyzed; his fluent tongue ceased to wag with its usual volubility, and when requested to name his time for the international contest, he begged to be excused until cured of his cold. He took the next steamer for Liverpool, and has not been heard of since. Thus Mr. Travers' incisive remark about the mental attributes of the oyster thoroughly squashed him and saved the oratorical honor of our country.—Chicago Herald.

Preventing Sunstroke.

The best thing to prevent sunstroke is a thoroughly ventilated hat, the ideal hat for summer being that which simply shades the head. If such a one cannot be procured, the lightest and best ventilated one obtainable should be worn, and it should be frequently lifted and held above the head, so as to shade it and let the air circulate around it. The frequent wetting of the head with cold water is, of course, good. Do not wear anything that prevents the free radiation of the natural heat from the head, and the free circulation of air around it. If a person is prostrated by sunstroke, put pounded ice or cold water on the head, and give plenty of fresh air, cool if possible.—American Agriculturist.

DISEASE IN THE MILK.

INVESTIGATION INTO THE HEALTHFULNESS OF DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Scientists Have Discovered That There is Danger in the Milk Can—Contagion at the Dairy—Alarming Aspect of the Question.

The subject of purity and healthfulness of milk and its products has received much attention from medical and sanitary authorities during the past year, and some very remarkable results of investigations are now being made public. A lecture on the etiology of scarlet fever was recently delivered by Dr. E. Klein, F.C.S., before the Royal institution in London. The principal theme of the paper was the relation of scarlet fever to milk supply. The possibility of the dissemination, and even origin, of the disease from this source was considered at length. Recorded cases are quoted to prove its possibility. The lecturer treats it as a certainty that milk has thus caused the spread of scarlet fever. Experiments by N. Galthier, a French scientist, have been published. These were directed to tubercular sickness. Dairy produce from cows affected with tubercular disease was the subject of the investigations. Professor Galthier found that such articles of diet could communicate phthisis or consumption to poultry and swine, and could become thus directly or indirectly a serious menace to man.

Within the last few years a number of outbreaks of disease have been traced with great certainty to dairies as the center of contagion. So well proved have these cases seemed, that they have originated special popular names for the sicknesses thus occasioned. Thus milk typhoid, milk scarlatina, and milk diphtheria have come to be recognized. In a number of accurately recorded cases, an outbreak of some specific disease has been noted. The general history in all was identical. The spread was limited to a certain number of families. The medical officers found that all the families thus affected were supplied with milk from the same dealer. Then, on examining the stables or dairy whence the milk came, the source of contagion was manifest. A case of scarlet fever would be found in the family or among the employes, or some of the residents possibly had diphtheria. In a number of instances such conditions were established. At the present time the English health authorities consider these cases proved. They form the basis for a somewhat disquieting suspicion affecting our milk supply.

But there is a more alarming aspect of the question. The result of some of the more recent observations is that cows may themselves become infected with a sickness resembling scarlet fever, and that such cows may, by their milk, cause the true scarlet fever to be developed in human beings.

This conclusion has been led to by an examination of data in recorded cases. In some instances where the origin of the sickness was traced to milk, and where also a scarlet fever case had existed in some person connected with the dairy, too long a period elapsed before the breaking out of the epidemic to allow it to be attributed to direct conveyance by the milk. Another class of cases is cited in which a human origin, proximate or ultimate, could in no way be traced. In one such instance an outbreak of scarlet fever was associated with a certain dairy. No human being could in any way be fixed upon as the originator. Even the sanitary conditions were examined, with negative results. The disease was finally attributed to certain cows. Examination of them showed the presence of disease, whose symptoms included sores upon the body, ulcerations and a visceral complaint resembling that occurring in scarlet fever in the human being. The outbreak had, from other data, been limited to these cows as a source. Their disease so similar to the human scarlet fever made it almost a certainty that they were the origin of the trouble.

The examination by bacterial analysis was entered into and confirmed these suspicions. The same micrococcus was found in the blood of scarlet fever patients and in the affected cows. The action of the human microbe on animals was identical with that of the vaccine one. This investigation, a full outline of which it is needless to give, clinched the proof. Succeeding occurrences investigated in the same general way gave identical results.

It may be considered as clearly proved that milk can be a serious source of danger to health or life. The remedy is a simple one. By heat the micrococci are destroyed. If the milk is heated to 185 deg. F., it will be rendered safe. Any infectious microbes present will be killed. But while this disposes of the milk it does not touch the disposal of milk products. Butter, cream and cheese are all uncooked. Butter represents raw fat, or uncooked oleaginous matter. It cannot be heated to a high degree without injury. One of the methods of freeing it from casein was to melt it, but the process was found to cause deterioration. Butter must be uncooked.—Scientific American.

An Old Man's Wit.

"Women don't always have their wits about them," said an elderly gentleman the other morning. "A lady friend of mine came into my office with her little girl of 5. The pretty white dress of the latter had a streak of blood upon it, the result of a visit to a dentist. The mother didn't want to return uptown with the child, as she was not through with her shopping. Could I help her out of her quandary? I took the child back to the toilet room, with the idea of washing out the stain, but a better plan occurred to me. The stain was a long, narrow, downward streak, and the white dress was pleated up and down. What do you think I did? I folded over one of the pleats and pinned it, thus hiding the stain from view. The mother asked: 'Why, how did you remove the stain without spreading it and taking the starch out?' Then I showed her that it was still there. Her look was one of pleasure and chagrin. 'I must confess that you didn't help to raise your family in vain,' she said, 'while you must think I am excessively stupid. And I am—for the plan ought to have suggested itself to me.'"—Philadelphia Call.

VICTIMS IN THE MORGUE.

How the Mangled Remains Are Patched Up So as to Look Respectable.

"The worst bodies we have to handle after the floaters," said the superintendent, "are the victims of railroad accidents, who are all mangled and torn to shreds. They are brought in here sometimes utterly unrecognizable, just chopped up fine so that the pieces of flesh just quiver when shaken in a box. One man I remember was struck by a train out near the cemeteries and dragged 400 yards. The remains were brought here in a barrel and there wasn't in the whole horrible heap anything by which it could be recognized as the remains of a human body except one little finger. There wasn't two inches of flesh and bone together, and even the man's clothes had been cut and torn to little shreds. He was never identified. A negro boy was struck by a train on the levee and when it had passed there wasn't a recognizable thing scattered along the track but a pair of boots.

"Once I remember a man was run over at the mouth of the tunnel and his head was cut off at the shoulders as clean as if it was done with a knife. I dressed the body and I sewed on the head and hid the stitches with a high standing collar and dressed him up nicely, and he was sent home in just as nice condition as if he had died in bed. One man was mangled all to pieces. His hands and feet were cut off and the wheels, passing over his head, had cut through it sideways, so that the face and ears came off together. The rest of his body was all in small pieces. His friends had me fix the body up. It took me twenty-four hours to do it. I had to sort out the pieces and put in sticks of wood where the bones had been torn out, and I fastened the flesh around the sticks. I made a light wooden breast bone and some wooden ribs to fill out the chest. I sewed the two halves of the head together and then the entire head to the shoulders, and then cut the burial suit in two and spread it over the breast and legs and put on a collar. I made wooden bones for the arms and for the legs and then sewed on the feet and hands.

"I remember very well how my assistant, a colored man, made me awfully mad, and then how I had to laugh when just as we thought we were done we found we'd sewed the hands on the wrong arms, and we had to do it all over again. We got the job finished, though, and that man was sent home looking as pretty as you ever saw a corpse look. It was a fine job and I got $35 and my assistant $25 for our services. Oh! I've fixed up many a one of them, I tell you. It's right to do it, because people don't like to look upon their mangled relatives. I've plugged up bullet holes and knife wounds with plaster of paris and painted them so they couldn't be seen. There isn't any man but what, if he's a corpse at all, wants to be a respectable kind of corpse."—Globe-Democrat Interview.

Lemon and Hot Water.

A sallow faced young man stood at the prescription counter of an up town drug store the other day and surveyed the clerk with heavy, yellow eyes.

"Not feeling well?" observed the latter pleasantly.

"Should say I wasn't," responded the other gruffly.

"What's the matter?"

"Headache, liver out of order, can't eat, can't sleep, can't think, can't even drink. Life's a gloomy, dismal, dyspeptic fraud, and I don't know what to do. I believe I'd die today if I didn't have a business engagement to-morrow, and I hardly think I could get over it in time to meet my man."

"I'll tell you what to take," observed the clerk suavely. "It will do you good. If it doesn't I don't know what will."

"What is it? I don't want any old medical chestnuts. My stomach is educated up to appreciate novelties."

"It is a simple remedy and efficacious," returned the clerk. "It is merely lemon juice squeezed into a glass of hot water, without sugar or a stick. Drink a glass of this night and morning and see what the effect will be. I recommended it to a friend of mine the other day who was much sicker than you. He tried it, and found himself better almost immediately. His daily headaches, which medicine had failed to cure, left him, his appetite improved and he gained several pounds in weight within a few weeks. After a while he omitted the drink, either at night or in the morning, and now at times does without either of them. I am satisfied from experiment that there is no better medicine for persons who are troubled with bilious and liver complaints than the simple remedy I have given. It is far better than quinine or any other drug, and it is devoid of their injurious consequences. It excites the liver, stimulates the digestive organs and tones up the system generally. It is not unpleasant to take either; indeed, one soon gets to liking it."—New York Mail and Express.

Drinks for Hot Weather.

A reporter who talked with a local druggist obtained much valuable information concerning the liquid tastes of Brooklynites. This was in part what he said: "People in hot weather drink cooling drinks for the purpose of cooling off. This is a mistake. A man may be ever so warm and while he obtains temporary relief by drinking a glass of something cool, the after effects are even worse than before. Those men who perspire freely are seldom sunstruck. The pores are always open, and while cool drinks do not cool I would not advise any one to abstain from liquids during hot weather. Did you ever take a hot bath for the purpose of cooling off? No! Well, try it. You will find that the effect is instantaneous. On the same principle that a Turkish bath has a cooling effect on a heated body so a hot bath in your own house has a similar effect.

"I have made a study of cooling drinks and of the many kinds offered I find that sour lemonade gives the best results. A lemon will at once cool one thoroughly and the effect is lasting. No, I don't think highly of ice cream soda. In the first place, the cream, syrup and carbonated gas make a poor combination, and to a weak or dyspeptic stomach the effect is demoralizing. Acid phosphates, lime juice and certain kinds of mineral waters are next to lemonade for cooling purposes. Beer? Oh, no! Any kind of malt liquor is most heating to the blood. The more beer a man drinks the more he wants. That man who gets fat in summer when others are becoming thinner daily drinks beer and his flesh is not natural."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Accumulation of Bonds.

An observing Washington gentleman has been examining the records and finds that the accumulation of government bonds is becoming marked. Interest checks are now sent to 89,000 persons, whereas not long ago 60,000 checks were issued on the same amount. The concentration of holdings in large cities is also noticeable.—Brooklyn Eagle.

SWEET EYES.

See those sweet eyes, those more than sweetest eyes;
Eyes whom the stars exceed not in their grace;
See love at gaze, love that would fain devise,
But cannot speak, to plead his wondrous case.
Love would discharge the duty of his heart
In beauty's praise, whose greatness doth deny
Words to his thoughts, and thoughts to his desert;
Which high conceit since nothing can supply,
Love here constrain'd the conquest to confess,
Bids silence sigh what tongue cannot express.

NOT FOR THE MONEY.

In the drawing room of a small house—one of a very long terrace in a northern suburb of London—sat a girl by the firelight. The room, a long narrow one, with folding doors, was shabbily and poorly furnished. The furniture and cheap ornaments, however, had been carefully dusted and brushed. Evidently their owners had endeavored to make the best of their threadbare appearance. The girl lay almost at full length on a low American chair placed straight across the hearth-rug, seemingly for the purpose of getting the greater amount of benefit from the poor fire burning in the grate. She was tall, slight and fair, and certainly good looking. And a wealth of chestnut hair crowned the top of an exceedingly well shaped head. The eyes, large and well opened, looked dreamily into the fire.

The door opened, and a lady entered. Shutting the door softly, she stepped with a gliding motion to the girl in the American chair, and stood looking down at her. The relationship was evident. The mother was the image of the daughter, grown older, petrified, as it were, into a distinctly unpleasant looking middle age. The chestnut hair had faded, without becoming gray; her eyes, large and well opened, like her daughter's, had a stony stare in them; and her mouth the same discontented and sarcastic droop, ten times intensified. Not a pleasant old lady to look upon by any means.

The girl had not removed her eyes from the fire on her mother's entrance. She remained in precisely the same position, apparently oblivious of the fact that Mrs. Grenoble's stony gaze was fixed upon her face.

At last the mother broke the silence.

"I hope, Paula, you have read the letter carefully, and have come at last to a sensible conclusion on the matter,"

"Which letter, and what conclusion?" asked the girl, with a sarcastic inflection of her low, clear voice.

"Don't be foolish, Paula," said her mother testily. "You know perfectly well what I mean. You have a chance that not one girl in ten thousand has—the chances of a rich, fortunate life, without worries, without cares, without"—

"Love," murmured the girl softly.

"Love!" said her mother, scornfully. "What is love without money? or what is love worth in comparison to money? Love is a mere word without substance, without reality, without meaning. And you have the opportunity of lifelong enjoyment of a princely fortune—£50,000 that will be yours as long as you remain single. And you hesitate!"

"Naturally," said Paula, a gleam of mischief lighting up the weariness of her pale face. "Most girls object to the prospect of being an old maid."

"Listen to reason, Paula. You are very young, only just turned 20. Your whole life up to the present moment has been spent in weary, hopeless poverty. Not the poverty of the very poor, who often want daily bread, but who, the bread once gained, have no appearances to keep up. Ours is the poverty of the well born, the well bred, the daily striving to keep our shabby clothes presentable, our shabby house and furniture from getting even more worn and threadbare. Think what you might do with that £50,000. The dresses you could have to wear, the jewels you might buy; think how you would have the chance of traveling in foreign countries, of seeing places and things you can only sigh and long for now in vain. And then think of your life, married to Charles Etheridge on his paltry £300 a year, with no prospect of its ever much increasing."

When her mother spoke of the £50,000, Paula's eyes gleamed with a strange light, and her mouth lost its sarcastic droop, and quivered with excitement. At the mention of Charles Etheridge's name she slightly brushed her lips with the letter she held in her left hand.

"Well?" said her mother interrogatively.

"Ah," said Paula, lazily changing her position in the American chair, so as to face her mother, "you were saying something to me just now. It seemed rather long. I can't quite remember it all. Ah, yes; about the £50,000, and Uncle Dick's insane will. By the way, I suppose he wasn't mad when he made it, was he? It couldn't be disputed or anything of that kind, could it? What a pity! £50,000 is worth having."

"Yes," said Mrs. Grenoble, "and if you have a grain of sense in your composition, you'll keep it, and send Charles Etheridge about his business. You will be able to ride in your carriage and"—

"Dress like the Princess of Wales," said Paula languidly. "Yes, there is something tangible about ready money, after all. Oh! to have something else to wear but this rag of a gown! Let me think. I would have a tailor made costume. One tailor made costume! No, I'd have half a dozen, one for every day in the week, and a tight fitting jacket trimmed with sable, and a plush mantle for the theatre, and, and—oh, if it could only be!" and the girl's eyes sparkled, and a covetous longing look came over the fair face.

Her mother with a few more words of caustic persuasion left the room. She thought she knew her daughter's character better than the girl herself. She knew that the life of pinching poverty had brought out all the worst traits in Paula's disposition, and she hoped to make capital of them for her own especial benefit. If Paula accepted the conditions of her uncle's will and lived single, she would naturally live at home, and Mrs. Grenoble would naturally become partaker of all the good things that Paula with her money would be able to procure.

In the meantime Paula was lying back in the American chair musing. Presently she lifted the letter with the closely written four pages, and went once more over the well known lines. As she read her eyes darkened and softened with a tender light, and the droop at the corner of her mouth became less marked.

At the end she laid it in her lap, and, without changing her position, read the other letter. The reading took the loveliest out of her eyes and brought back a covetous gleam which shone like bright steel through her thick lashes.

Then she spoke to herself in a low tone.

"Which is it to be? Love or money? And I must decide to-morrow. Charlie and his £300 a year—and the £50,000."

The next morning, when Paula came down rather late to breakfast, she found her mother busily reading a very long and closely written letter whilst uttering grunts of strong disapproval.

"What is the matter?" asked Paula, sitting listlessly down at the table, and lazily buttering her toast.

"Why, I have just had a letter from Miss Price and her companion asking me to take her in for a few days. She wants to do some shopping, or make some calls, or something of the kind, and our house is convenient, so she says. I should have thought, too far from town. But then she has her own carriage, or hires one, and we shall not see much of her, that is one comfort. I wonder she does not go to her own relations. She has plenty of them."

"Possibly she is afraid," said Paula languidly. "She is so alarmingly rich, she might think it too much of a temptation to her dear relations to stay with them."

"Paula, you are ridiculous, and you have such strange notions for so young a girl. It is really very impolitic to talk in the way you do. However, I'm too busy to scold now"—

"For small mercies let us be grateful," murmured Paula.

"Miss Price may be here at any moment, and I must see about her room," and Mrs. Grenoble bustled out of the room.

Half an hour afterward there was a meek little rap at the street door. In a few minutes Miss Price and her companion were ushered into the room.

Miss Price was a little thin old lady of over 60 years old. She wore her light hair, which was streaked with gray, in tiny little curls on each side of her cheeks. Her face was little and shrunken, her figure pinched and small, her hands and feet small. But the worst thing about her was the utterly careworn and miserable expression of her face. A listless wretchedness had, as it were, eaten itself into her withered countenance, and was shown in every gesture of her knotted, veined hands and bony neck.

"And yet she has four thousand a year," said Paula to herself.

Miss Price appeared in mortal dread of her companion, and yet totally unable to do without her. Mrs. Mount tyrannized over her in the most shamefaced manner, and poor Miss Price submitted meekly in the listless, hopeless way her face betrayed.

"Will there ever be a time when a companion will be necessary to my well being?" thought Paula.

The next morning was fine, and Miss Price elected to do her shopping. A carriage was ordered, for Miss Price was not strong, and the rattle and noise of omnibuses did not agree with her. But she grumbled at the expense, and feared she was ruining herself. Paula and Mrs. Mount accompanied her. And what a time they had of it! Miss Price wanted dresses, but nothing suited her. The cheap ones were too common, and the better ones too expensive. Her unhappy face was bent over the goods, comparing them, finding fault now with the color, now with the texture, but generally with the price. Finally she chose an expensive silk and some brown cashmere, and her face looked more miserable still after she had paid the bill. And then to the milliners, and the same scene enacted over again. Paula watched, as in a dream, the pretty tasteful bonnets changed, as if by magic, into dowdy commonplace constructions as soon as they surrounded Miss Price's discontented old face. It seemed to occur to Miss Price also that it did not much matter which she chose, for she kept her face turned resolutely from the mirrors, and deferred, at last, to Mrs. Mount's judgment. Paula shuddered as she thought that she might come to just such an unpleasant old age. To be dependent on the taste of a companion for the selection of one's clothes! To look so wretched and woe begone as to come to shun the sight of one's own countenance!

Paula was thoughtful that evening and very silent. Mrs. Grenoble told her it was time, full time, to send an answer to the letters. Paula said she would write them to-morrow before breakfast. Her mother said, of course, there was no doubt as to her choice. No child, blessed with such a mother as she had to advise her, would hesitate a moment. Paula answered gravely that the advent of Miss Price had left no doubt in her mind as to which course she would pursue. Her mother looked at her doubtfully as she made this last remark, lighting her bedroom candle meanwhile, but Paula gave a prodigious yawn, which entirely destroyed any expression her face might have possessed at the time, and vanished from the room.

When Paula reached her bedroom she placed her candle on the toilet table, and, sitting down with her elbows on the table and her cheeks resting in her two hands, calmly surveyed her reflection in the glass. It was certainly pleasant to look upon, with its piles of chestnut hair crowning the pale oval face and its steady, clear eyes shining in the dim light. But as she looked Paula, as through a mist, seemed to see the chestnut hair grown scanty and streaked with gray, the face thin and lined, the mouth with its, alas! already too discontented droop, intensified and hardened by years of loneliness and unhappiness. Of what use would fine clothes be then with a face like that? To live alone, uncared for, unloved, would soon sour the young face, and then—she would grow like Miss Price!

"No," said Paula resolutely, "no—I cannot do it. Not for £50,000 can I consent to run the risk of growing like Miss Price. I dare say when I am as old as she is I shall be fat and have a red face, but then Charlie will be old, too, and probably fat also, so we shan't be able to reproach each other. And we shall be together, and we shall have got over all our little quarrels and misunderstandings, and we shall by that time understand each other's peculiarities. We shall be horribly poor, 'beastly poor,' as Bella Wilfer used to say; but for all that I would rather be with Charlie than with mamma all my life. And then the fine clothes—what good are they after one has grown old and ugly? And as to traveling about and seeing things—why, I would rather stay at home than have to go about alone or with—a Miss Price. I wish—I wish I could choose Charlie and the £50,000, too. I don't suppose that anybody with more money than Charlie would ask me to marry him. It wouldn't do to run the risk of waiting. No. It is my fate to be Mrs. Etheridge; and—well, it's a better fate than to be Miss Price."

The next morning Paula went down to breakfast with a demure countenance. She and her mother were alone. Miss Price was breakfasting in bed, and Mrs. Mount was bearing her company. Mrs. Grenoble looked at her daughter inquisitively, but Paula subsided languidly into a chair and asked for a cup of coffee. Then she took up the paper and became apparently immersed in the political crisis.

At last Mrs. Grenoble's patience gave way.

"Have you written those letters, Paula?"

"What letters?"

"You know as well as I do. The letters to Mr. Etheridge and the lawyer."

"Yes. I have written them."

"And your decision is what was to be expected?"

"Precisely."

"You have written to Mr. Etheridge, breaking off your engagement?"

"I have written to Mr. Etheridge, telling him I would marry him when he pleases," returned Paula, calmly.

"What! What!" burst forth Mrs. Grenoble in a fury.

"Well, that was what was to be expected, wasn't it? We have been engaged two years, and a wedding is generally expected after that length of time, and Charlie wants me to fix the day, and so I've fixed it, and there's an end of the matter."—Margaret Cresswell in Belgravia.

Manufacture of Tin Cans.

A striking instance of labor saving machinery is that which makes tin cans. One of the machines used in the process solders the longitudinal seams of the cans at the rate of fifty a minute, the cans rushing along in a continuous stream; of course a drop or two of solder is left on the can. The drop on the outside is easily wiped off, but it is not so easy to secure the drop left on the inside. An ingenious workman has patented an arrangement for wiping the inside of the can without stopping the machinery. Result, several thousand dollars in royalties in his own pocket and a saving of $15 worth of solder per day to the firm that uses it. Thirty thousand cans is a day's work for this machine.

DEACON BURDETTE.

His Talk Out of Church on Current Topics.

DELIVER US FROM RICHES.

"Great possessions may bring great misfortunes." The wise man is sometimes correct. Only six months ago a man in Ohio was left a fortune of $700,000 by the death of his father. And already his brothers, sisters and cousins have gone into court and proved that the man's father had three wives at one time, that he died head and ears in debt to all his relatives, that his fortune was dishonestly obtained and that he was a defaulter to the government, that he had been violently insane at several periods of his life and was in a condition of hopeless imbecility at the time he made this will, that the man forged this will any how, and that he was not able to take care of such a property in any case, being himself little better than an idiot. He has still a little of the money left, but he leaves it out on the doorstep every night, in the hope that somebody will come along and steal it.

THE WEAK POINT IN THE EVIDENCE.

"At five minutes of 11 o'clock, on the 11th of June, I shall drop dead," said Charles Kirtland, of Piqua, Ohio, eleven years ago. And at five minutes to 11 o'clock on the morning of June 11, 1887, a baker's wagon ran over Charles and broke his leg. "Drop bread," was what Charles meant to say when he struck out in the prophecy business.

HEAVEN LOVES THE HEATHEN.

Favored above all lands are the Isles of Sandwich. In their recent war of the rebellion the entire army only numbered 147 men, so if every soldier under arms, and the sutler in the tent, writes a magazine history of the war, the series of war articles can only run twelve years and four months. And yet some people believe in a second probation for the heathen. Not much; they seem to get their heaven here.

A BEAUTIFUL HEATHEN CUSTOM.

When a Chinaman earnestly presses a visitor to stay to dinner, the visitor is then aware that he is not wanted, and straightway he goes home. In America the invitation to remain to dinner, however cordially phrased, often means just what it does among the lying heathen, but what puzzles the Christian is to know just when it means "stay" and when it means "go." In some respects the heathen hold away over us.

THE TRAMP.

Slow paced, with listless step he moved along,
To where the woodbine mantled all the door,
And tossed its restless shadows on the floor;
His idle breath, escaping in a song,
Bore scents of Old Tom Juniper along;
Upon both feet he limped, as travel sore.
For alms he asked; ate them and asked for more;
And lingered yet, the banquet to prolong,
While I felt envy of his bone and brawn,
And his glad life, so free from toil or care;
And did not know, till after he was gone,
That he had taken with him my best pair
Of summer clothes, and other things, to pawn,
And drifted idly off—we knew not where.

Ah, would that I, like him, might come and go,
As birds and winds and shadows go and come,
Careless of all things sad or burdensome;
Living as idly as fair lilies grow
Beside the dreamy river's slumb'rous flow;
At morn, awakened by the hollow drum
Of ove[illegible]ride in the thicket; by the hum
Of ove[illegible]es at noontime's glow,
Lulled to my [illegible]day slumber in the wood;
Drone like, to eat the sweets by others stored;
To live with birds and winds in brotherhood,
My fashion plate the clothes line, and my board
The farmer's care—but, ah, it is no good;
I have no luck; I would get caught and scored.

Just as Sis Said.

Mr. De Sickly has called upon Bobby's sister, and is waiting for that young lady to make her appearance. Bobby enters in the meantime.

De Sickly, with a grin—How-de-do, Bobby! Don't you know me? Come and tell me what's my name.

Bobby—Well, sir, if it ain't just as Sis said, you haven't sense enough to know what your name is. If you'll wait a minute I'll fimi out for you. I heard pa say he had you on the list, so I guess he must know your name.—Texas Siftings.

Home, Sweet Home.

She (thoughtfully)—George, dear, are there not times in your life when the pathos and truth of that most beautiful of all songs, "Home, sweet home, there is no place like home," appear to you with startling vividness, and fill your soul with longing?

He (a baseball player)—Yes, indeed, particularly when I'm on third base with two men out.—New York Sun.

A New Kind of "Pastoral" Poetry.

"Are you fond of poetry, Mrs. Foepar?"

"Indeed I am, Miss Pert; especially pastoral poetry."

"Pastoral poetry! Have you a volume of it?"

"To be sure—the hymnal, you know; it's made up of verses by all the pastors of our church."—Yonkers Gazette.

A Variation of Hood.

I remember, I remember,
That boarding house forlorn,
The little window where the smell
Of hash came in at morn.
I mind the broken looking glass,
The mattress like a rock,
The servant girl from County Clare,
Whose face would stop a clock.

I remember, I remember,
The gutta percha hen
They used to serve as chick of spring,
To thirteen hungry men.
We blasted it with dynamite,
We vexed its bones full sore,
In vain; 'twas served up fricaseed,
For two or three days more.

I remember, I remember,
The next room's fiendish wight,
Who practiced the B flat cornet
From early morn till night.
We stood his dreary "Peek-a-boo,"
"Sweet Violets" and more;
But when he tried "We Never Speak,"
We wallowed in his gore.

I remember, I remember,
The lengthy weekly bill,
Received by me with shudders and
The symptoms of a chill.
I also call to mind the night,
When no one was about,
When into space I dropped my trunk,
And through the dark skipped out.

A Portland man swallowed a large dose of starch which a suspicious druggist prepared for him in place of the strychnine he asked for. The miserable man swooned and and was soon stretched upon his bed cold and stiff. He Made a Neat Hit.

"Is there any one living here under 21 years of age?" inquired a man who rang the door bell to a Lake street residence the other day.

"No, there is not," rather sharply replied a spinster of eight and thirty summers who answered the ring.

"Why, is it possible?" was the reply of the apparently astonished man. "Don't you live here?"

THE GIANT T GEORGE ST.

I have secured for the fall and winter trade of 1887-8, the largest and most complete stock of Cook Stoves, Ranges and Heaters, ever offered in Peterborough, and would direct special attention to the following popular Stoves as having been proved the very best in the market.

THE ORIGINAL NORTHWEST & MANITOBA,
made by the E. & C. Gurney Co.

THE HAPPY COOK C., THE HAPPY COOK AND GRAND IMPERIAL;
made by Peterborough Stove & Furnace Co.

THE MILNE WOOD COOK, ORION & JEWEL COOK, made by Barrow, Stewart & Milne.

I shall also be supplied by other manufacturers with the newest and best Cooking Stoves known to the trade.

In Wood and Coal Ranges, I hold a variety of patterns.

With regard to high art Base Burners, it is my intention not only to show the well established Stoves, such as the Athenian, Radiant Home, New Jewel and Art Garland, "all in new dress," but to add new designs of the most attractive appearance and strongest heaters.

Wrought Iron Ranges for hotels, shanty and domestic use kept in stock and made to order.

Special attention paid to Sanitary Plumbing, Gas-fitting, Iron Roofing, Iron Troughing etc., etc.

ADAM HALL.

THE CRYSTAL BLOCK.

We wish to thank our many customers in Town and County for the very liberal support given us this season.

Notwithstanding the great blowing of trumpets in the Dry Goods Trade, and all conceivable plans to catch, our trade has increased and our prospects brighter than ever.

We are preparing for a still larger increase in business during the fall and winter season.

Our importations will be large, and we feel confident that our efforts will be appreciated.

The balance of our Summer Stock we will continue to sell at clearing prices.

We would call your special attention to our Millinery Department Ladies are loud in their praises of this department. We are importing a large stock of ladies' and childrens' Mantles, Fur Trimmings etc., which we shall be pleased to have you call and see and compare prices.
